LATEST INTELLIGENCE

By Telegraph to the New-York Daily Times.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Resignation of Lieut. Bullock—The Provincial Parliaments and the Reciprocity Treaty.

Special Dispatch to the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Oct. 5.

Lieut. J. D. BULLOCK, of the Navy, now commanding the Mail steamer Georgia, has resigned, and his resignation has been accepted.

It is understood that the Provincial Parliaments will immediately be called together, to take such Legislative action as is necessary before the Reciprocity Treaty can go into effect. s.

Attorney-General Cushing on the Reciprocity Treaty.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Oct. 5.

The Union this morning publishes the opinion of Attorney-General CUSHING on the Reciprocity Treaty. It is four columns long, and in substance declares that the President cannot issue his Proclamation until he has received satisfactory evidence of the enactment by the Imperial Parliament and the Provincial Parliaments of Canada, New-Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island, of Special laws to give full effect to the Treaty, according to the terms of the Act of Congress.

The Whig Convention.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

JACKSON, Mich., Wednesday, Oct. 4.

The Whig Convention met to-day, and after organizing adopted a strong address to the Whigs of the State, virtually recognizing the Independent State ticket, setting forth their views upon the Slavery question, pledging themselves to unite with the friends of freedom in an effort to redeem the State. Each member signed the address and they adjourned. Everything passed off unanimously.

Yellow Fever at the South.

BALTIMORE, Thursday, Oct. 5.

The Southern mail as late as due from all points is received.

At Charleston the number of deaths last week reached 108, including 72 by yellow fever. On Monday last there were only two deaths from the fever in that city.

At Augusta, on Saturday last, there were six deaths from the fever. The alarm had somewhat subsided, although the disease showed no abatement.

At Montgomery the fever has ceased its ravages.

On Tuesday there were only two deaths at Savannah and two at Charleston, while at Augusta there were none.

Great Display of Babies—National Baby Show at Springfield, Ohio.

CINCINNATI, Thursday, Oct. 5.

The National Baby Show took place at Springfield to-day, and one hundred and twenty entries of babies were made.

The first premium for the finest baby of two years old, or under, was a tea set with a salver, valued at three hundred dollars. The second premium, for the next best baby, was a tea set valued at two hundred dollars. The third premium was two hundred dollars for the finest child under one year of age. The fourth premium was a Parian marble group.

The first premium was awarded to Mrs. ROHNE, of Vienna, Ohio; the second to Mrs. MCDOWELL, of Cincinnati; the third to Mrs. ARTHUR, of Philadelphia; the fourth to Mrs. HENRY HOWE, of Cincinnati.

A letter was received from "Fanny Fern," and read for the edification of all concerned.

Letters were also received from Mrs. SWISSHELM, Mrs. CRITTENDEN, Mrs. MOTT, and HORACE GREELEY, Esq.

Mr. GREELEY thought that much attention should be given to the development of the human constitution, in a country where able-bodied men sold for five hundred to fifteen hundred dollars a piece.

Mrs. MOTT thought that black babies should have been admitted to this exhibition and had an equal chance with the whites.

Among the exhibitors was an old woman who came with her seventeenth child. She claimed a premium on that ground.

Philadelphia Money Market—Rumored Failures.

PHILADELPHIA, Thursday, Oct. 5.

Our Money market exhibits no change. Stocks are very dull at the following quotations: Long Island Railroad, 14; Morris Canal, 13; Pennsylvania Railroad, 45½; Pennsylvania State Fives, 84; Reading Railroad, 38.

Various rumors of failures are afloat, but we hear of nothing reliable.

Heavy Robbery—Correction.

PHILADELPHIA, Thursday, Oct. 5.

A dispatch as to the robbery of $4,500 on the train from Baltimore last night, published in this morning's papers, is incorrect, Mr. RISTENBALT being the unfortunate victim instead of the robber.

Pennsylvania Politics.

PHILADELPHIA, Thursday, Oct. 5.

Judge POLLOCK, the Whig candidate for Governor, speaks at a political meeting to night. Both candidates were present, as invited guests, at a supper given by one of the Odd Fellows' lodges, last night.

Whig Convention in New-Jersey—Congressional Nominations.

HIGHTSTOWN, N. J., Thursday, Oct. 5.

The Whig Convention of the Second Congressional District of New-Jersey assembled at Hightstown to-day, and was organized by appointing Dr. JOHN T. WOODHULL, of Monmouth, President.

Resolutions were passed in favor of the principles of protection and internal improvements, complimenting the Whig members of the last Congress for their fidelity to freedom, and unqualifiedly condemning the repeal of the Missouri Compromise.

Dr. GEORGE R. ROBBINS, of Mercer County, was nominated for Congress on the first ballot, by a vote of 73 to 45.

Laying up of Western Steamers—Illness of Capt. McBride.

CLEVELAND, Thursday, Oct. 5.

The steamers Crescent City and Queen of the West, belonging to the Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati Railroad line, and running between here and Buffalo, will to-morrow be laid up at Buffalo for the Winter.

Captain D. H. MCBRIDE, of the Queen, last evening was stricken with paralysis in the right side. He was carried home to Erie in the cars.

Non-Arrival of the Arctic.

THE HIGHLANDS, Thursday, Oct. 5—8 P. M.

There are as yet, no signs of the Arctic. The Canada is also now over twelve days out, but has not made her appearance.

HALIFAX, Thursday, Oct. 5—1 P. M.

The Arctic has not been heard of at this port, up to the present moment.

Weather at Halifax—No News of the Arctic.

HALIFAX, Thursday, Oct. 5.

On Monday the weather was fine and calm; on Tuesday it was very windy and rained heavily all night; on Wednesday it was rainy with a strong southerly wind continuing all night. To-day it is fine and clear.

There were no signs of the steamer Arctic at 7 o'clock this evening.

Arrival of the Steamer Osprey.

HALIFAX, Thursday, Oct. 5.

The steamship Osprey, from Philadelphia and Boston, arrived here this morning, bound to St. Johns for the passengers of the wrecked steamship Philadelphia.

Annual Meeting of the Hartford Agricultural Society.

HARTFORD, Thursday, Oct. 5.

The annual meeting of the Hartford County Agricultural Society took place to-day. The exhibition will continue for a week. To-day it was fully attended. Premiums have been offered to the ladies for the best performances in horsemanship, and the exercises are to commence to-morrow morning, on the South Meadows.

Lehigh County (Pa.) Agricultural Fair.

ALLENTOWN, Thursday, Oct. 5.

The Lehigh County Agricultural Fair opened this morning. Our town is overflowing with people, and it is expected that at least twenty thousand visitors will be present at the Fair.

Democratic Congressional Nomination.

NEWARK, N. J., Thursday, Oct. 5.

SAMUEL LILLY was renominated in the Third Congressional District of New-Jersey to-day, as the Democratic candidate for Congress.

Military Visit.

BOSTON, Thursday, Oct. 5.

The Baxter Light Guard, of New-York, arrived here this morning quite unexpectedly to our citizens, and no escort was ready to receive them. They will, however, be well cared for.

THE CAMPAIGN OPENED.

OLD TAMMANY IN ITS ANCIENT GLORY.

The Soft-Shells in Council.

CHONCOLOGICAL SKIRMISHING!

Speeches of John Cochrane, Alex. Ming, and Captain Rynders.

Rich Incidents, Fights, &c., &c.

The departed glory of Tammany has again returned. The ancient scenes that were its pride in the past have been revived. Last evening, the Unterrified assembled within its walls, to get the ball in motion for the present campaign, under a supposition that Gov. SEYMOUR would be present to address the meeting, and through the influence of music, lager-bier, and the call of the Old War Horse to "defend their houses, their property and their liberties."

THOMAS DUNLAP, of the "Pewter Mug," called the meeting to order, nominating ROBERT KELLY for President.

In taking his seat, Mr. KELLY said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I have to return you my thanks for the honor you have done me by selecting me to preside over this meeting. I am gratified to take a part in a meeting called to respond to the nomination of HORATIO SEYMOUR [several cheers] to his second term as Governor of the State of New-York. I believe that the people of New-York are ready to respond to his renomination, and that this surpassing array of numbers is an evidence of the spirit that pervades the people. This is the first popular demonstration in the present political campaign, and is to be followed I trust by, may I not say, successful exertion to the end. Whatever may be the issue of this campaign against the strange combination that has been banded together under the old Whig leaders, and their auspices and conduct; we know at least that we have an unimpeachable candidate, and that we are the supporters of the true principles of Liberty, and that either now or hereafter we will certainly triumph. [Faint cheers.] Gentlemen, what is your further wish in regard to this present organization?

A VOICE—To vote the Maine law. [Cries of "Good, good."]

Formidable lists of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries were read, after which ALEXANDER MING read Mr. PURDY's famous call. The Young Men's Democratic Union Club entered the Hall at this point, preceded by ROBERTSON's Band.

Mr. DAVID O'KEEFE then proceeded to read the following resolution, which was received with irregular and weak cheering:

1. Resolved, That the issue now presented distinctly to the electors of the State, whether or not the arbitrary and oppressive bill in relation to the use of certain liquors, passed by the Legislature of this State at its last session, but vetoed by Governor SEYMOUR, shall finally become a law, or be forever defeated, should be firmly and energetically met. That in the contest which it involves, we range ourselves, with zeal and enthusiasm, upon the side which asserts the rights of the citizen, the security of his property, and the inviolability of his home. That the assaults made by fanaticism upon the great principles of right and law, established by our forefathers in this country, and in the Old World, through the arduous and unceasing contests of centuries, formidable as that assault is rendered by the combination of diverse and hostile parties, factions, sects and interests under the same leader, in the hope of securing by joint effort a victory which will insure the success of the favorite isms of each, and especially of the one so nobly resisted by Governor SEYMOUR, demands that all opposed to their desperate and dangerous schemes, of whatever political association, wherever born, or however diverse in sentiment on other subjects, should rally as one man to vindicate the honored legacies of our fathers, and resist the attempt now making to lay the foundation for their overthrow. And that with this conviction strong in our minds, and impelled by the importance of the struggle to a corresponding earnestness, we have now met to draw the lines upon this issue, and to take our position until the contest is finally decided under the banner—the good old banner of Freedom.

2. Resolved, That in the nomination of MYRON H. CLARK and HENRY J. RAYMOND for Governor and Lieutenant Governor for the State of New-York, the Whig party has identified itself with a prohibitory liquor law, and indicated its settled determination to invoke the authority of law entirely to suppress the traffic by confiscating the property, and making the sale of intoxicating beverages a penal offence, punishable by fine and imprisonment.

3. Resolved, That the deliberate selection by the Whig State Convention of the foremost advocate in the State Legislature of the vetoed liquor bill, can be regarded in no other aspect than as an intention on the part of that body to present in the clearest manner the approval of that bill for the action of the people. That this attempt, the first ever made in this State to connect a question solely of morals with the organization of a political party, cuts asunder all the obligations which may have heretofore bound men to association with one party or in opposition to another; and that we therefore do now declare from henceforth that we recognise no party obligations until this question is decided, other than of fraternity with all opposed to the bill, and resistance to those who are banded together to secure its passage into a law. And that we call upon those of our fellow-citizens who agree with us in our sentiments upon this subject, to unite with us in a vigorous effort to defeat MYRON H. CLARK, the champion of the bill, and elect HORATIO SEYMOUR, who promptly, fearlessly and firmly placed himself in the breach, and by his single arm repelled the would-be tyrants from the statute book of the State.

4. Resolved, That the judgment rendered by a learned jurist, that the veto of Governor SEYMOUR upon the liquor bill of the last Legislature, was unnecessary and injudicious, accompanied as that judgment was by the declaration that the person uttering it had never read the bill, commends him neither to the confidence nor respect of intelligent men; and that we confidently take an appeal from the interested opinion of a rival candidate to the Court of the People, and submit to their calm and unbiassed decision, if the overthrow of a project which sends ruthless strangers across the threshold of a quiet home, and drags forth the property of its owner to destruction, and which binds around the wrists of the citizen the galling chains of slavery to other men's opinions, can be truly pronounced either unnecessary or injudicious.

5. Resolved, That while regarding temperance as essential to the social and political prosperity of a people, we do not believe that it exclusively depends on the passing and possession of a law conflicting with the pursuits of business and violating the sanctity of our houses.

6. Resolved, That deeply impressed with the necessity of restoring those encroachments of fanaticism on the rights and property of the citizen, and recognising the services rendered and position occupied by HORATIO SEYMOUR in vindicating the great principle involved, we pledge ourselves to give him and WM. H. LUDLOW, the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, our undivided and earnest support.

The resolutions were, on motion, adopted.

The President then announced that Hon. ALEXANDER MING would address the meeting, and

Hon. ALEXANDER MING instantly appeared, amid hisses and loud cries for "COCHRANE, COCHRANE!" "Order!" "Hurrah for California!" After braving the storm like a hero for five consecutive minutes, Mr. MING retired modestly, and

JOHN COCHRANE arose, and, with a spasmodic jerk, took off his overcoat. He said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS—You must not be surprised—

VOICES—Put him out. Get down from there.

Mr. COCHRANE—Gentlemen, it is only a few Whigs who have come here to make a noise—

[At this point, a skirmish commenced in the south-west corner of the hall, for which locality there was a general rush.]

Mr. MING—Be quiet; stand still.

Mr. COCHRANE—It is only a parcel of Whig ruffians filled with rot-gut liquor. In a few minutes order will be restored.

[The row continued. There was a general effort to put a man out of the room. Capt. RYNDERS rushed to the scene of action from the platform. Mr. COCHRANE made two other efforts to resume, but failed.]

EXCITED BELLIGERENT TO MR. COCHRAN.—Speak,—G—d d—n you, JOHN, speak.

Mr. COCHRAN.—Put him out—put him out.

A VOICE—Three cheers for SEYMOUR.

[The assembly were too intently engaged in the scrimmage to respond.]

Mr. COCHRANE.—There is one principle gentlemen, that we are assembled to discuss this evening. We have taken our position as a national party, and have occupied it long. At this time we have come to discuss a State issue, and I ask your attention to a few remarks. The question now is between Governor SEYMOUR on one side, and MYRON H. CLARK and the temperance bill on the other. [Loud cheers.]

[The noise in the corner again resumed. Mr. COCHRANE casts a look towards the scene of action, and for a moment pondereth.]

Mr. COCHRANE.—Put him out. Will you permit yourselves to be disturbed by Whig ruffians?

VOICES—No.

[The excitement continued. Some scuffling and falling over in the crowd.]

Mr. COCHRANE.—Gentlemen Democrats, we have always encountered these difficulties with the Whigs when we have entered upon a campaign. If there was not some disturbance of this nature, I should be disposed to think that we were about to be unsuccessful.

A man here dashed into the crowd and made a circuit around the room, knocking right and left, and finally made a hasty exit through the door.

VOICES—Turn him out.

A VOICE—You are too d——d late. The bird is flown.

[Fighting in the corner continues.]

Mr. COCHRANE—Now we will take another talk. The man who is making this disturbance is a certain notorious person, a butcher by trade and a loafer by profession.

VOICE—Three cheers for Governor SEYMOUR. [Responded to.]

Mr. COCHRANE—There are three leading principles, fellow-citizens, which are presented for your consideration in relation to the question. They are the violation of peace and sanctity of the home of the citizen which that abominable bill contemplates. It aims at the disturbance of the quiet peace of families.

A VOICE—Hur-r-ah for California.

VOICES—Put him out.

Mr. COCHRANE—The main obstacles to the course which our Whig opponents have adopted is, that they pretend that without Temperance the social system will cease, and that Temperance shall be coerced by law. It is an effort to violate the rights of conscience, and to pursue a course in opposition to common sense, and which course can only be adopted when this people shall have sunk into anarchy and discord. Fellow-citizens, you might as well declare that a man shall eat rye-bread instead of wheat-bread as to prescribe what a man shall drink; and these parties would be divided into rye-faces and dough-faces. [Several persons heard to laugh.] Are you prepared to sustain a bill which deprives you of the right of conscience? Is it that a bill shall stand upon your statute book, which opposes your bill of rights, (which declares that the citizen shall be secure in his person, his property and his home,)—a bill which declares that whenever suspicion exists that liquor is contained in any house, upon any premises, in any the greatest or least quantity, that there, upon complaint made, the magistrate whom you have invested with judicial power shall have the power to order those doors to be entered, those premises to be searched, the property of the individual to be seized, to be confiscated, and to be destroyed without trial by jury or fair legal decree? Are these principles, or are they paradoxes? Are they facts for which the Democracy will appear, or are they facts against which the Democracy will strive? I take it, fellow-citizens, that it is the latter. Such a law, proposed by the Whig party, headed by MYRON CLARK, the candidate of all the isms of the day, the candidate of the Abolitionists, of the Fourierites, and of the Women's Rights people, a meeting of the Democracy of old Tammany will never fail to set its face against. These principles you sustain are at the basis of your liberties. They constitute your Constitution itself, and when they are stricken down we return to ante-revolutionary times, when the myrmidons of England tred upon your necks. [Cheers.] Why was it that the Revolution in England started CHARLES from his throne? [A Voice—"That's what I say."] Why was it that popular principle triumphed there? [G—d d—n him!] It was from the same reason that they triumphed here. ["I will speak my mind in whatever place I go."]

These interpretations, it may be observed, were produced by a couple of fellows immediately under the speaker, who, during the latter part of his address, were more intently and warmly engaged in a high personal discussion, apparently oblivious of the orator's existence.

Mr. COCHRANE, after saying that the violation of domestic quiet and personal liberty which King CHARLES enforced in England, led to the Revolution, and was about being introduced here by the Whigs in the form of a sumptuary law, went on to observe that another feature in that bill of abominations was this, that the peaceful citizen, against whom slander or malignancy might raise suspicion, might be dragged from the arms of his family, at the midnight hour, upon the ground, as likely to be false as true, that he knew of the concealment somewhere of certain liquors.

The Speaker was again brought to a stand by the renewal of the disturbances that had been so frequent in their occurrence during the address; so far, at his address. A general rush was made from the corner where the discontents had taken up their quarters through the crowd to the other end of the room, and a sort of running scrimmage kept up for several minutes. The retreating party were beaten round the entire circuit of the room; but, although there was a vast discrepancy in their numbers, as compared with their assailants, they never once turned their backs. A good many cuffs, blows, and kicks, were interchanged during the tussle; but the affair was rather of a puffy-hardly description, and we believe we can say with safety that very few bones were broken. There was any quantity, however, of oaths and execrations, and the noise certainly of itself was enough to frighten people who had no opportunity of observing the mode of tactics that prevailed during the fray. Eventually, order was obtained, and Mr. COCHRANE proceeded uninterruptedly to the end of his speech.

He said Magistrates and Justices of the Peace were invested by the Maine law with an arbitrary discretion to arrest a man and imprison him for an indefinite period. It was true that the bill had been sanctioned by the Legislature; but, then, he said, the Legislature was a Whig one. In this connection, he would say that all those connected with Temperance Societies did not favor this bill. These Societies believed rightly that when morality becomes a subject for coercion, it is an oppression. This was the nature of the bill the Democracy were now met to oppose, and as they banded together in the numbers that properly belonged to them, and strove with an energy worthy of their ancient fame, would they succeed in killing it and vindicating liberty and peace, or in placing a power stronger than the Spanish Inquisition over them, and making themselves the victims to the Juggernaut that MYRON CLARKE had prepared for them. He advocated the claims of Governor SEYMOUR, who had vetoed this bill, for reelection, and stated that an unexpected calamity had prevented the Governor from being in attendance to-night; but he could assure them that, within two weeks, he (the Governor) would be there in their midst, to declare the principles which he had already so boldly sustained. The speaker resumed his seat, amid cheering, followed by a call for three cheers for Governor SEYMOUR, which was responded to.

Hon. ALEXANDER MING was the next speaker introduced. He said the great defenders of the Constitution were ever found in Tammany Hall, then great Temple of Liberty. They would ever oppose a law which would rob the City of one-eighth of its real estate, and plunge hundreds of their mothers and orphan sisters and children into abject poverty and want, in order to gratify a morbid and sensual appetite to govern man through his prejudices of religion and morals. [Cheers.] This was a law made for one section of the people, and not for all. It would coerce the poor man without curbing the rich. He exhorted them to heal up the schism which is rending the body of the Democracy, and which was due, he said, more to misguided leaders than to the great Democratic masses. A rising scuffle drowned the speaker at this stage of his speech. When things had settled down, he proceeded to impress on them the wisdom of forgetting all former differences, and recombining with the other wing of the party to oppose the advocates of the Liquor law. In conclusion he hoped that when they met in this Hall after the sun would set on the day of the election, he might be able to say to them, "Well done thou faithful servants, come and enter into Tammany Hall."

Mr. RAIT was next introduced. He said it is an honor at any time to speak in Tammany, and especially so now, considering our platform and nominations, of which we may indeed feel proud.

Capt. RYNDERS was called upon and appeared. He supposed as they were Anti-Maine Law men that they had no objection to his taking a glass of brandy before addressing them. He had always supposed that Tammany Hall was not to be frightened by a little fighting, and his views were that night verified. They were not opposed by the square Whigs in this campaign, but by the fag-end of all factions. He reviewed in his peculiar manner the various issues in the coming campaign, referring to the Know-Nothings, Maine Law, Greytown, England, newspapers, &c.

A. L. PINNEY then made a few remarks, when about 10 o'clock the meeting adjourned.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

SANDY HOOK, Friday, Oct. 6—3 A. M.

The steamship Canada is below, coming in. We shall give her news in a later edition.

A Wanderer's Gleanings in the Empire State.

NUMBER THREE.

I began to realize that it was the Empire State before I had traversed its whole length from east to west. I sent my imagination to traverse it from north to south and to wander over all its hills and valleys, and formed some idea of its wealth and magnificence. I watched the lazy beasts upon that little thread of water upon which are transported the treasures of the West, not so bright and glittering but not less precious than the treasures of the East, and comprehended its importance as a link to bind the Union and cement the bonds of brotherhood, and wondered not that they boasted of their enterprise and denominated their State one of the strong pillars in the great edifice whose walls are mighty oceans, which, with the chains of rivers and lakes which bound it and intersect it, present the greatest example of a self-supporting structure the world has produced.

My simile I derived from looking around in the great dépôt from which I started. Next to the wonders in nature the wonders in machinery are to me the most wonderful. The great building with nothing to uphold it, within my comprehension, is my constant admiration and study whilst under its roof, and the arrangement with which I see the ponderous engine wheel on its fiery way, ready to dash in pieces everything in its path, and yet as obedient to the voice of man as the little barrow which he holds in his hand, is no less than when I first beheld it. As long as it is in sight I watch it, creeping along under the hill and through the Valley, but, to my woman's limited knowledge and understanding, it is impossible to imagine the propelling or controlling power by which it is ruled. When science has done as much for agriculture as for mechanics, the wealth of the country will increase in a tenfold ratio; and the necessity is quite as great that science should enter our dwellings and preside at our firesides, as that it should march over our fields and reveal the mysteries of soils. Agricultural schools are fearlessly advocated, and are no longer considered preposterous; schools to teach domestic economy are as absolutely necessary, and not till there is a revolution in the minds of men concerning the education of women, will the homes of our fair land become the ornaments and blessings they should be—the true nurseries for the prosperity and happiness of the nation. Oh, when will men be convinced that highly educated and cultivated women only can properly keep house or cook, to say nothing of exercising patience, long-suffering and forbearance, and governing children.

I was moved to these reflections by the miserable dinner which was got up at Syracuse, for the poor wayfarers who throng their dining-rooms. There was five times the quantity which was really necessary to feed the multitude, so that there was no need of a miracle to multiply loaves and fishes, but nothing short of a miracle could have converted it into food savory to the taste and fit for digestion. The presiding geniuses were women, and I never sit at a table in hotel or restaurant, in castle or cottage, in country residence or secluded farm-house, where I cannot tell, the moment I cast my eye over the arrangements and compliments, whether an educated or ignorant woman superintended. I have been in hundreds and thousands of homes from Maine to Missouri and never yet saw a dozen instances to prove the contrary, that the more highly educated a woman is in every department of knowledge, the better housekeeper she makes, the better she can and does cook, and sweep and dust, and the more ignorant women are, the more shiftless they are.

We entered Buffalo in the evening in a pelting rain, where I had the sad experience of a woman without a protector. First the baggage man accused me of cheating him out of ten cents, without giving me the opportunity of defending myself; and the people at the American drew the time-honored conclusion that a woman alone is not of much consequence, and so I was an hour or two in getting a room at all, and an hour or two more in getting the necessary comforts of a sleeping apartment.

But the morning brought me friends, and to one of the editorial fraternity I was indebted for all the comforts of a home whilst I remained at the hotel; and his genuine kindness obliterated the remembrance of the discomforts I had experienced on my arrival.

And here I would like to say to that anonymous minister who wrote me a reprehensive letter whilst at Saratoga, accusing me of irreverence and disrespect for the sacred office, because I reprehended one who brought great reproach and ridicule upon himself and his profession, that I find the majority of ministers guilty of no such foolish sensitiveness, and this I have so often seen that I think it proved—those who are dependent upon their office for their dignity are very tenacious of its honors; but those who are capable of conferring dignity upon their office have no fears of its being degraded by just expositions, and would have no fears though all the powers of earth and hell were to rise up against it. Wolves in sheep's clothing are more likely to devour the flock than real sheep who stand outside the fold; and what is ordained of God will certainly stand.

If on any occasion, or under any circumstances, I am in need of friends, I appeal to ministers, and with a certainty which experience has generated of finding friends. Most truly do I believe that there is no other so large class of men among whom are to be found so few unworthy and dishonorable men. Many of them have peculiarities which are the consequences of their isolated and peculiar duties, but which do not detract at all from their excellence, though I think they do in some measure from their usefulness. The pleasantest associations of my life are connected with one good old Father in the ministry, in whom is embodied everything that is lovely and noble in man. He is the type ever before my eyes,—Oh, would there were many like unto him,—and I think my right hand would forget its cunning and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I were to say aught of ministers or their holy calling which he would disapprove. With an example which ever seemed in my eyes perfection, it is not strange that I sometimes revolt at examples so diametrically opposite, and though I have all my life sat at his feet and learned—perhaps I should say listened to wisdom, I never learned there that folly and sin should go unreproved because they are cloaked with the garb of sanctity. He not only preached religion, but lived it, and in such a way that it was always winning and never repulsive. In him were united the affability and dignity which insure honor and love, as I never saw them in any other man of any profession; and if he were the only minister as he is not by many, that I could number among my friends, I would for his sake, respect the office which he so honors. I would like to picture the family into which I was welcomed, by a minister's fireside, as I lingered by the way, where were all the elements of a happy home, in greater abundance and perfection than I have often seen, and where I did not seem at all a bug-bear to parents or children, because they had nothing to fear from her who sees such strange things behind family curtains sometimes, and relates them too. Would that such houses could be multiplied a thousand, ten thousand times, as they might be, if intelligent, educated women were chosen to preside over them, and richly aided and appreciated in their manifold labors.

Now I am in a missionary's family, of which you will hear more anon. Hither I was escorted on my way by an Indian chief, whom I found to be a very companionable personage, and to whom both you and I, Mr. Editor, were far from strangers. I am among the Seneca Indians, and in a few of their cabins the TIMES and Tribune are household words. I came here for the purpose of picking up among them a little legend and lore, and when I have been here a little longer may give you some of the results of my gleanings among a peculiar people—a people that have ever possessed a peculiar interest for me. MINNIE MYRTLE.

The Peach Rot.

The yellows which is indicated by the color of the leaves and the rotting of the peach, and is thought to be incurable, is said to threaten the existence of this valuable fruit. It is, probably, attributable to the exhaustion of certain organic elements in the soil, by continued cultivation—probably prussic acid, in which the peach, cherry, and plum abound. As the cherry has now to our knowledge been subject to this disease, it would be well to inoculate the peach into cherry stocks, those of the wild cherry in particular, as it is proof against the borer. The wild peach, which grows in Georgia and other Southern States, has been tried on Long Island, but with what results we do not know. Unlike the common peach, it has green instead of yellowish twigs, and its foliage is darker. It may be inferred from this that it possesses more of that principle, the absence of which causes this malady.

An experienced pomologist states a fact that we have never seen published, and that is, that to produce a particular variety of peach, instead of inoculating it is only necessary to plant the entire fruit in the Fall. If the peach be dried it will do equally well. It is a simpler and cheaper method, and the tree comes into bearing sooner. We can account for the above result by the well known law of nature, by which like produces like, which is strengthened when the pulp, which is the natural manure for the germ in the kernel, containing essential ingredients of the parent stock, nourishes its reproductive vigor. This theory was confirmed by the demonstration of several trees which had evidently never been budded, and whose fruit was identical with that of their progenitor.

The writer of this article once knew a large peach tree which was associated with his earliest recollections, and upon inquiry found that it was more than forty years old, while several generations of similar trees, in the same soil, had passed away. In New-Jersey and Delaware, it is necessary to renew the peach orchard every five or six years. This led to examination, and a bed of tansy was discovered about the trunk. Now, as this plant is very noxious to insects, its essential oil being used by entomologists to kill their specimens, and by old-fashioned housewives as a vermifuge and bug bane, it was naturally inferred that the preservation of this tree to such a green old age, was attributable to the presence of this plant. It was decided to try the experiment on others, and accordingly a few of the roots were placed about each of the other trees on the premises, some of which gave signs of decay. These roots spread rapidly, so that it is necessary every year to cut away a portion of them. Not only has it preserved for several years the sound trees, but renovated those that were unsound. The odor of the plant doubtless keeps off the insect enemies of this kind of tree, and it might have the same effect on others, as the plum, apple and pear, as well as the elm, sycamore, and other ornamental trees.

Anecdotes of Mr. Webster.

A correspondent of the New-York Evening Post, writing from Marshfield, gives the following touching incident about the last illness of Mr. WEBSTER:

"During his last sickness he called for HATOR, one of his laborers, and told him to keep a favorite sail-boat moored by the shore of the Lake within sight of his bedroom window, within a lantern burning perpetually at the masthead until his life should be extinguished. Just a night or two before his death, while he was momentary expecting the arrival of his last hour, a tremendous gale blew over the land from the ocean, all night, carrying wreck and destruction in all directions. At an early hour the dying statesman looked from his window to see the fate of his boat and lantern. There they were, the boat still safe at her moorings, and the lantern glimmering still as bright as ever in the gray of the morning. Turning to a friend who was sitting by his bedside, where he had been watching all night, he said with a faint smile of satisfaction, 'Well, you see our home squadron seems to have ridden out the gale.' He appeared to think that his own fate was in some way connected with the safety of the boat."

This calls to mind another characteristic anecdote of the great Statesman, which has never been published.

At the dissolution of President TYLER's, or more properly, General HARRISON's Cabinet, as they were originally appointed by him, the Northeastern Boundary Question was unsettled, and Mr. ADAMS told Mr. WEBSTER that on no account should he resign till after the settlement of that delicate and important issue. He said that his country had higher claims upon him than any party. The sage of Quincy knew the confidence of the British Government as well as that of his own countrymen, and particularly those most interested in the disputed territory, the people of Maine and Massachusetts, in Mr. WEBSTER, and the utter want of it in the President at that time. On the other hand, some of Mr. WEBSTER's friends in the House thought it safest for him to resign, and had he done so, it might have enhanced his chances for the Presidency, but he followed the dictates of his own will and judgment, which accorded with the advice of the ex-President.

The same day that the resignation of his colleagues was published, in reply to a gentleman who waited on him at the State Department, he said; "I am sick, Sir, and ought to be in my bed. Ill as I am in body, I am worse in mind, but I am determined to ride out the storm! Let the consequences be to me what they may, the country shall suffer from no action of mine."

How he rode out the gale is matter of history, but how many weary hours of anxiety and watching on the part of the pilot who steered the ship of State through all the difficulties of that negotiation till its ultimate ratification, when he gave up the office that he had so illustriously dignified, no one can know but he that heedeth the sparrows fall.

What the Citizen Wants.

The Citizen thus closes a notice of the article in the London Times predicting that the time may come when the European powers will regard and treat the United States as a "public nuisance:"

Long ago KOSSUTH seriously warned America that matters would come to this. If the crowned heads of Europe can succeed in quashing and cushioning this war in Europe, (once so promising and full of hope,) and so keeping the Republicans down—for that is the sole aim, and policy, and prayer of the Western Powers—then comes America's turn. In that case it would turnout, and be clearly proved, that the "policy of non-intervention" was the surest way to involve this continent at last in a long and grievous war.

Not that this would be a very serious evil to America. Steam can urge ships eastward as well as in the course of the sun. There are, at least, a hundred millions of people in Europe who would hail the American flag appearing among them as the Romans hailed the twin demi-gods at the Lake Regillus. Three ocean steamships once in Irish waters, carrying one thousand men each, would be more than enough to wrest Ireland from England—that is to say, to dismember and destroy the British Empire root and branch.

Candidly, we do fervently pray that the "Western Powers" may find a solemn verdict against America—that she is a public nuisance—and proceed to execution accordingly. The world would then, indeed, see a good deed.

Compliment from a Foreigner to a New-York Book.

Professor AGASSIZ has just published a new work on Scenery, Science and Art. A late number of the Athenæum of London, gives some extracts. We find the following agreeable paragraph:

"I found an excellent dinner at the hotel (Astor House) at which I put up, and learnt that the proprietors took this opportunity of paying a compliment to their friends, by giving a better meal than usual, and providing excellent champagne ad libitum, without extra charge. As it is the practice in the States generally for each person to pay a fixed and uniform rate per day for board and lodging together, at all houses of public entertainment, which in fact rather resemble boarding-houses than our hotels or inns, this arrangement is not so extraordinary as it would otherwise appear. It was certainly very agreeable; as, owing to our long voyage, and the difficulty of preserving the flavor of meats in an ice house, our appetites were made to enable us to do full justice to the excellent venison and other delicacies served up. The price charged at the first hotels for board and lodging, (except wines and liquors,) is not more than about 10s. 6d. per day; and for this one may have breakfast at any hour, dinner, tea and supper; and I must say that, here at least, no one need complain of the hurry of the dinner, or the difficulty of obtaining anything wanted. All that is needed is to speak to the waiter, and give him to understand that some prospective good in the way of a half-dollar awaits him if he looks after your interests, and he will then take care that you shall want for nothing."

Blackwood's Magazine on Slavery in America.

The following remarks on the folly of British interference with Slavery in America, occur in a review of Mrs. STOWE's last book, in the last number of Blackwood:

Opinion in this country, in so far as it can be expressed—and it has been expressed in thousands of ways—is unanimous for the emancipation of the negro. One and all of us consider the continuance of slavery, as it exists in America, a foul blot upon the nation, which proclaims itself so peculiarly free; and we have said so in anything but unconcessive terms. Still, what we have said, in the expression of an opinion only. We may object to slavery in America, as we may object to the same institution in Turkey, or to serfage in Russia, or to anything else beyond our cognizance and jurisdiction; but we are not entitled to usurp the right, which every separate nation possesses, of regulating its own laws according to its peculiar position. We say this, because, of late years, the tendency towards popular demonstrations and sympathising meetings in England, has increased to such a degree as even to embarrass our relations with foreign powers.

It seems to us that there really was no occasion for holding public meetings to show that the sympathy of this country was decidedly in favor of the cause of emancipation, or to irritate the Americans by a vain-glorious comparison of our own conduct contrasted with theirs. We ought, in common decency, to remember that no very great treat of time has elapsed since slavery was abolished in the British colonies; and we, in matters of this kind, interest is always a ruling motive, we should also bear in mind that the prosperity of those colonies has not been increased by the substitution of free for forced labor. Very few of us, on this side of the Atlantic, are able to give a competent opinion as to what effect immediate and unconditional emancipation might produce upon the slave-holding States of America; and therefore we are hardly entitled to do more that assert the general principle, which condemns the absol

FROM THE SOUTHWESTERN FRONTIER.

Retreat of the Revolution in Tamaulipas—General Condition of Mexican Affairs—Society, Education, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

BROWNSVILLE, (Texas,) Saturday, Sept. 16, 1854.

The revolutionary storm in the State of Tamaulipas, which recently burst with some fury, sending hourly bulletins to be posted up in town, and sending some thirty Government troops in a rapid exit to another world, has suddenly subsided into a calm. Rumors have been quite prevalent that CAYETANO's party has broken up into small bands, each looking its own security; and again, that still connected, they are in quiet possession of Matamoras. We are sadly in want of railroads and telegraphs in this country: without them we are but creeping at a snail's pace behind a fast age. Will not somebody wake up the honorable Secretary of the Brownsville and Rio Grande Railroad Company? But to return. It is certain the revolutionists failed to follow up the success of skirmishing with CRUZ's regulars by attacking Matamoras, and drew off towards Victoria. It is stated that money, the god of war as well as of peace, is wanting. Patriotism, enthusiasm and proclamations may do for an hour or a day; the novelty of wooly fabrics and lances may temporarily elevate the rustic trooper's ideas, but the belly soon becomes clamorous and decidedly uncomfortable.

A few of CAPISTRAN's associates,—like himself having had their property confiscated,—are personally interested in the contest; while the great majority not only expose themselves to cold lead, but receive no other recompense than certain vague promises for the future. Empty stomachs are cordially not consoled by empty pockets, especially when there is a contingent prospect of a smashed head to finish on. Taking in view the probability of disaffection where it is rumored,—the fact that 400 fresh troops have recently arrived from Vera Cruz, and the hilarity of to-night in the capital, it may be supposed that the revolution in Tamaulipas is powerless for the present,—only.

Trade is much interrupted here by the warfare of our neighbors, and will be till some security is again established. Our merchants regret the state of affairs, and heartily wish the conflict decided. As I have before stated, the citizens of Mexico cannot be benefited by any change till they unlearn what they have learned amiss,—serve Church and State,—job the wily priest of his power, and transfer the same to educated masses. The people are impoverished to beautify perishable cathedrals,—to support numerous pampered priests,—and increase the vast property already belonging to the Church. If there are corrective blessings in the twirl of the Pope's fingers, or efficacy in the epistles of "Pilo-Vevitas," who so suddenly unfolded himself in all the living terrors of the Archbishop, let them be wafted here on the priests, so that the wars and misery springing from their corruption may be blotted out of the land.

Wall-street may rest assured there is neither the fear nor hope of any future war between the United States and Mexico. The disparity in power is too obvious. The "eighteen tons of gold" will soon waste away, leaving the payee as powerless as before. Diplomacy will be substituted for six-pounders—treaties for mangled masses—gold for "more grape," and the lion and the lamb live on the easiest terms possible along the Rio Grande. It is true, the lion may get awfully hungry some day, as we know lions do, and—but I hope not. Cuba is infinitely more palatable, spiced down with the Sandwich Islands. Neither, probably, will be swallowed without due notice,—as Greytown, for instance.

To-day is the Mexican Fourth of July, when, as at home, the great national heart leaps up in its throat for joy. The cleanest costumes are donned—soldiers, emblazoned in all the rainbow colors, march in and around town—Chinese crackers pop away incessantly—and, in short, every one seems to be imbued with all the enthusiasm of a genuine "Yankee." During the evening, the houses in Matamoras are to be illuminated, while the grand fiesta, closing the day, is a ball given by the military, or, in other words, by the Government. It is a kind of exclusive affair, wherein the spangle of the lady glitters with the scarlet and silver of the "faithful." Invitations have been sent to this side, to town and garrison. Officers who, but a few years ago, were engaged in making targets of each other, and shuffled to quite different music from that of the quadrille, will to-night meet on a different and better field. The age is certainly progressive!

Some of the Mexican ladies are truly handsome—the residue too near the copper color to take American captive. Their language, particularly when pure and from a pretty mouth, is the most beautiful on earth. So liquid is it, and so smoothly does it flow in song, as their fingers sweep over the harp, that it plays upon the ear when singer and instrument are forgotten. Like the generality of American ladies, they seem fond of dancing,—all night, too, till broad daylight,—but there is a singular difference. The former always has a sparkle in her eye, and keeps up a running fire of conversation with her partner; but the latter is comparatively as silent as the portrait on the wall. She moves through the figure with exquisite grace,—throws open and closes her fan with surprising dexterity,—looks you in the face contentedly, but there is no smile on it—no emotion, either of pain or pleasure, visible. Had death struck her at the commencement of the waltz, she could scarce have been impressed with a more rigid or passive set of features. But judge not; still water runs deep; she was made for love, and is but philosophical in this glitter of lights and gallantry. She has a language of her own for the favored, while the multitude, as it should, "knows nothing" about it.

At 12 M. precisely the Mexican flag was saluted in garrison by 21 guns, by order of Major PORTER. This courtesy of the Major's, who has an experienced knowledge of its propriety in a national point of view, was in return for a similar compliment paid to our flag on the last Anniversary of our Independence. Scarce had the last gun died away when the Mexican battery commenced; and again, scarce had its last gun silenced itself when a shower broke over head, with peal after peal of thunder. Mars and Jupiter Tonans in friendly strife! The contrast was striking indeed. Heaven's and earth's artillery had each in rapid succession boomed over the plain—one the work of human hands, and the other directed by the Almighty's hand. No doubt can possibly arise as to which had the victory—to which belonged all power and grandeur. The voice of the twenty-fours was but a weak whisper against those clear tones of unknown caliber, that broke over the earth and rolled away—

"Far on the utmost verge of that huge dome,
Which bears its other arch above the world."

The Governor has ordered out six Companies of Rangers to rendezvous at certain towns on the 15th proximo. They are to be supplied with equipments and rations by Government, but must await an appropriation by Congress for their pay. It is now hoped a breathing spell will be afforded our troops, who have been on hard duty in rain, mud and sunshine, from January 1 to December 31. Chasing Comanches, &c., over a running ground of six hundred miles square, with now and then an arrow-head piercing a vital part, or one's body variegated with the bites of every insect, from a tick to a centipede of the genus Scolopendra, is no childish play. I hope the honorable gentleman from ——, a State usually noted for enlightened and generous legislation, may never be exposed to hon or able exile on the frontier of Texas, or to the above delights inseparable from it. No, I am wrong, for it would be well perhaps, for the present condition and future prospects of the army, if he should try it for a few weeks—say in July—and relate his experience and observation to his peers. A few years more sadly chan ged the feelings of the House for the Army, that on a bare quorum could scarce constitute a true index of its will. Officers trust the members will examine truly,—send for persons and papers if necessary,—give them the consideration of peers and clerks, and not be so severe in denunciations where they are manifestly in error. If they will give the subject an impartial investigation, imagine for instance themselves and families forced to California on $750 a-year, it is believed they will become more charitable in their conclusions. In the mean time officers must live on hope—things is not much changed, I reckon, since that, though in these days the military "Jordan is a hard road to travel"—

"There's a good time coming, boys,
Only wait a little longer."

Comparatively to the many good things of the old States, one physically starves here all the time; though it is true, at particular seasons the market is credibly supplied with native products. Just now the maternal head is at a loss for a change, and has but little need for Miss LESLIE's famous recipes. Female servants—paid from $10 to $15 per month—are scarcely to be had, while New-York is swarming with them at one-third the price. Too often, when one is secured, are you too vividly reminded of the old saw, "God sends provisions, but the devil sends cooks." It may be they have constitutional objections to coming South. Right there, Miss Nipper—stick to it.

Once in two weeks the United States mail comes in from New-Orleans, throwing the whole town in a happy ferment. This—the mail, I mean—certainly is a genuine blessing, and would be more so, if it came oftener, as it is the only medium, as yet, of intercourse with friends, in the white settlements. My worthy friend, the Postmaster—ever ready, except then, to give an astute legal opinion, drub an aspirant at chess, translate the Eneid, or accept a cigar, works like the busy bee in conjunction with his poorly paid deputies, and, mirabile dictu! never loses his accustomed patience. The excitement is soon over—soon comes back again the humdrum monotony of every-day life for two weeks longer. In the meantime, however, the daily papers unfold their rich stores from home and the continent. From the latter we find, with Punch, that Turkey seems to have the Bear by the tail, while France and England manifest a decided disinclination to grapple with the "biting end," and from the former the usual political themes, interspersed with—

"Births, deaths, and weddings,
Forgeries, fires and wrecks,
Hurricanes and hailstones,
Brawls and broken necks."

The cholera has broken out terribly among the Mexican troops, as many as thirty deaths in one day being reported. Both that and the yellow fever will, doubtless, soon be in our midst, though I should think the fatality of last Fall will deprive them of the horrors they would otherwise create. It certainly would not be safe for strangers here between this and January. Acclimation is something, though I am compelled to believe there is more truth than ridicule in a friend's remark,—that no one is truly acclimated in this country till he is four feet under ground.

High Prices of Provisions—What is the Remedy?

HARTFORD, Tuesday, Oct. 3, 1854.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

DEAR SIR: A part of the plan suggested by Mr. WALPOLE, to obtain "cheap bread," and published in the TIMES to-day, appears to me very inconsistent and tyrannical.

The first part of his plan, I think, every one will freely endorse, i. e., the surplus balances go to farming; but the second part—to prohibit the exportation of grain after it had reached a certain price—common sense at once rebels against. It is a lamentable fact, that the scarcity of provisions, many times, is occasioned from the want of more and efficient farmers. Thousands of acres of fertile and arable land lie untouched in our Western States and Territories, and thousands more under a rude state of cultivation. If these lands were tilled, they would abundantly reward the tiller, and yield a rich harvest to our now half-famished country. But city laborers, connecting the idea of servility and drudgery with the life of the farmer, and unwilling to relinquish the morbid pleasures of the city, remain in its fetid influence and draw out a miserable and half-starved existence.

And to maintain them in this mode of life, philanthropists cry out, set a fixed price on breadstuffs, and compel those holding them to submit to it. Such a system may do in the despotic countries of the East, but in free America lives a spirit that got up a grand tea party in Boston, not many years ago, in commemoration of certain other fixed prices, and it will have unbounded rights. And that spirit is the chief characteristic, and the grand moving power of our noble yeomen. What is the justice of such an act? Is not that which one acquires by honest toil rightfully his, and by the principles of equal rights, is he not justified in disposing of it in a way most advantageous to himself?

In a money pressure the banker takes every advantage, and our laws do not directly interfere. The merchant, also, studies the prices and watches his opportunity to make a bargain, and his success is sanctioned by the laws of his country. Now, shall not the farmer have the same privilege, or shall our Legislature forbid him disposing of his hard-earned stores to a foreign country, on account of provisions being high at home, and it is necessary for the price to come down? Let the worthy gentleman consider well these questions and act accordingly, and if he thinks the laborer unworthy of his hire, let him prosecute, and if possible, complete his plan. And let him, also, understand if the price of articles which the farmer is not able to raise for his own consumption, is not ruinous to the purchaser, the price of breadstuffs will be in like manner. The better plan, however, I think, is for the gentleman to "drum up" his City laborers, take them into the country and cultivate the now idle lands,—then he will benefit those for whom he has such great sympathy, and avoid the necessity of enacting a law prohibiting the exportation of grain after it has reached a certain price. He will thus show himself a true philanthropist, and a friend to the FARMER.

Political Intelligence—Suffolk County.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

RIVERHEAD, Wednesday, Oct. 4, 1854.

The Hard-Shells of the Western Assembly District of this County have nominated Dr. THOMPSON for Assembly. The Softs have nominated GEORGE P. MILLS. The Whigs have not yet nominated in that District. In the Eastern Assembly District, DAVID G. FLOYD is nominated on the Independent Ticket. The Whigs and Democrats have neither nominated their Assemblyman yet.

The County Political Conventions were held here last evening. The Whig ticket is as follows: County Treasurer, JAMES H. TUTHILL; County Superintendent of the Poor, JOSHUA L. WELLS, Jr.; Justice of Sessions, PHILANDER R. JENNINGS. The following persons were chosen delegates to the Congressional Convention: H. W. Vail, Edwin Rose, F. R. Crandall, Geo. W. Thurber, P. R. Jennings, E. F. Carpenter, Nathaniel Miller, Samuel Carman, R. Jennings, J. R. Satterly, E. E. D. Skinner and E. K. Brejar. The Hards nominated G. S. Adams for Treasurer, and the Softs, Lester H. Davis for the same office.

Yours, &c., T.

A Suggestion.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Allow me to make a suggestion in regard to a matter in which the New-York public is interested. It is this: Let the City buy and remove Dr. SPRING's Church on Beekman-street, widen Nassau-street slightly on the west side, from Beekman to Spruce, and close Chatham-street from Beekman to its intersection with Nassau. Then let the General Government buy the Crystal Palace for a Post Office, and place it upon the site of the Church and abrogated street. By the adoption of such a measure, or series of measures, the Government would be in possession, with the loss of but little time, of a beautiful edifice; the convenience of our citizens would be consulted, and the Park be preserved in nearly its present proportions, which to the true Knickerbocker is no trifling consideration. There is but little doubt that a fair proposition in accordance with this suggestion would meet the assent and concurrence of all parties concerned. A. S. C.

Parks in London.

Since the year 1830, four new parks have either been formed, or are in the course of formation, throughout the metropolitan districts. Primrose-hill, containing 60 acres, was completed in 1842; Kennington Park, containing 18 acres, is now enclosed, laid out, and nearly finished; Victoria Park, containing no less than 265 acres, was completed in 1849; and Battersea Park, containing 319 acres, is now in the course of formation. The sums expended upon these various places of resort amount, in the aggregate, in round numbers to £380,000.

Rev. C. M. Butler, D. D., has accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Cincinnati, and will take charge of it on the 15th instant.

A silver service, worth $1,000, is to be presented to John W. Murray, late Mayor of Washington, by his friends in that city.

THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

Another Letter from Judge Swayne to R. C. Dobeven, Esq.

NEW-YORK, Wednesday, Oct. 4, 1854.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 28th ult., in answer to what I said against the expediency of a prohibitory liquor law was duly received. Although you virtually admit that "our heavenly Father works by slow processes, both in the moral and in the material world," you do not agree with me that in the promotion of Temperance "we shall act most wisely when we act like Him." The substance of your reasoning is, that God lives forever, and we do not; you then add—"Whatever we therefore propose to do for the Church, or the world, must be done promptly; it must be done quickly, for we are going to the grave." That is a very good argument in favor of activity in the right direction; but it does not prove that all kinds of measures should be resorted to for the purpose of obtaining a desirable end; nor is it any answer to my position, that "it takes time to bring about any great reformation in the morals or habits of a people, and any attempt to do it in a day will be likely to fail." There are many things which ought to be done as soon as possible, both "for the church and the world," and it is very true that "we are going to the grave," but that does not disprove what I said, that mild measures, rather than extreme ones, will be most likely to produce good results. It is of the utmost importance that man should believe the truth, and practice the precepts of the Gospel; and examples are not wanting of attempts to bring about that result—"promptly" by forcible means; but they have all failed. Creeds and forms of worship have been established by law; but there have always been unbelievers and non-conformists. Men who, like us, were "going to the grave," have felt the importance of purifying the Church from error, and of doing it "quickly;" but the burning of heretics did not answer the purpose. Experience proves that there is such a thing as being in too much haste even in a good cause.

Enough on that head, and I turn to another.

You, and those with whom you act, have, in the recent gatherings at Auburn, carried the temperance cause into party politics. Instead of treating it as a moral question, in which good men of all parties had a common interest, and in reference to which they might act together, without giving up their political preferences, you have made it part and parcel of a party movement, and one in which a large portion of the people of this State cannot unite. You have linked the temperance cause with political principles and opinions, which many worthy men utterly reject as dangerous to the welfare of the Republic. You have, in effect, shut them out from all participation in the temperance movement, unless they will surrender their political principles, and join a party to which they have never belonged. And this has been done while you profess to believe that a majority of the voters are in favor of a prohibitory law. If such is your opinion, and this question is to be settled at the polls, why did you not come boldly up to the work, and, like others, lay down your platform and nominate your own men? If you had no end in view, other than the promotion of Temperance, why did you fasten that cause to the tail of one of the political parties of the day? With your political preferences, as a citizen, I have nothing to do; but when you are acting as a moral reformer, in a matter which does not belong to party politics, I have a right to inquire why you perilled what you esteem a good cause by placing it in a condition to abide the chances and fluctuations of party politics. Suppose your party does not succeed, what then will become of the Temperance question? And suppose it does succeed, and a prohibitory law is passed, how long will it be likely to stand? If such questions as these presented themselves to your mind before the step was taken, it is difficult to suppose that you aimed at nothing but the promotion of temperance.

I do not inquire why you did not join your cause to another political party, for that would have been an error of the same kind.

Let me now say a word in relation to the principles and opinions to which you have bound the Temperance cause. You have placed it upon the Seraiocs, Anti-Nebraska, Free Democracy, Free-Soil, Abolition and "Higher Law" platforms. You have made it part and parcel of a sectional movement—the North against the South—which, in my judgment, cannot triumph without rending the Republic in pieces. The movement goes beyond the restoration of a geographical line between Slave and Free Territory, and attacks the sovereignty of the States by interfering with their internal affairs. It does not leave other States to follow our example, and get rid of Slavery in their own time and way, but seeks to compel them to act upon the dictation of others; and, to accomplish the end, it nullifies a part of the fundamental law of the Union. I do not say that such was the purpose of all who participated in the different Conventions; but if the master spirits are to be judged by their acts and declarations, such was their purpose. I shall not go into a review of the proceedings—let every man read them for himself. But I will briefly notice the position of two of your candidates for popular favor. They not only stand upon all the ultra platforms, but one of them, in giving in his adhesion to the doings of the Saratoga meeting, says: "I can stand on no other platform than that which has for its object the overthrow of that institution that holds it to be right to enslave any class of my fellow-men."

If this man means anything, he means to overthrow Slavery in the States where it now exists by law; and he means to do it in defiance of the Constitution of the United States, which not only recognizes the legal existence of Slavery, but imposes the duty of delivering up fugitives from service when they escape into another State. This candidate evidently repudiates the Constitution, and goes for the "higher law."

Let us now see what are the sentiments of your candidate for Governor, as publicly declared by one of the delegates to Auburn, in advocating the nominating of that candidate.

JOHN THOMAS said: "MYRON HOLLY CLARK was not on the (Whig) Baltimore platform, but entertained views similar to those of GARRIT SMITH." "Mr. CLARK denied that Slavery could be legalized, and held that it was a crime that all the laws in the Universe could not make legal." On being asked, "how do you know that," Mr. THOMAS replied, "he (CLARK) told me so." Here again, the fundamental law of the Union is plainly nullified. Indeed, Mr. CLARK goes beyond that, and rejects "all the laws in the Universe" which attempt to legalize Slavery. Before he can enter upon the duties of the office of Governor, he must lay his hand upon the Bible, and call God to witness that he "will support the Constitution of the United States;" and yet he has already told us that the oath will not bind him. It follows, of course, that he either stands on the "higher law," or rejects "all the laws in the Universe."

Governor CLARK must also swear that he "will faithfully discharge the duties of the office," and one of those duties, as prescribed by the State Constitution is to "take care that the laws are faithfully executed." When some one shall hereafter attempt to assert his rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States, by arresting a fugitive from service, and the Abolitionists come to the rescue, and blood runs in the streets, the Governor must either look calmly on or take the side of the mob, because he holds that all laws and constitutions recognizing Slavery are utterly void.

Such are the views of the men to whom you have committed the Temperance cause. It is to be used as a make-weight in a great movement, to array one section of the Union against another. If the project succeeds, and your men carry out their principles, this goodly Republic will be broken into fragments, and God only knows what other consequences will follow. It is safe, however, to conclude that Temperance can gain nothing by such intemperate proceedings, and that "the church and the world" will be no better than they are at present.

Let me be understood. I am not questioning the right of yourself, or any other man, to adopt and exercise his own political principles and preferences. I am only inquiring why the Temperance cause has been thrown into the vortex of party politics, and been made an instrument in promoting the madness of the times.

I avail myself of the opportunity to say, that since writing the letter to Mr. RICHARDSON which was read in the Temperance Convention, I have seen several sections of the liquor bill of last Winter, and find that it went much beyond mere prohibition, and contained provisions which I deem highly objectionable. Such a bill can never receive my support. It is proper to add, that reflection has confirmed the opinion which I expressed to you last April, and again in my letter of September, that no prohibitory liquor law ought to be passed.

Although you have risked everything on the single issue of prohibition, and adopted a political platform which I utterly reject, the Temperance cause itself is a good one, and I hope to see the time when milder and better counsels will prevail.

As this is a matter of a public nature, I shall give my letter to the press.

I am, very respectfully, yours,
GREENE C. BRONSON.

NEW VERSION BAPTISTS.

American Bible Union.

FIFTH ANNIVERSARY AT DR. CONE'S CHURCH.

The fifth anniversary of the "American Bible Union" (New Version Baptists) was opened yesterday in Dr. CONE's Church, corner of Broome and Elizabeth-streets. A business meeting, at which more than two hundred delegates from almost every section of the Union were present, was held in the lecture-room attached to the church, at 9 o'clock. Dr. CONE, the venerable President, took the Chair, and opened the business of the day by singing and prayer.

The Committee on Nominations reported the following persons for officers and managers of the Union for the ensuing year, and the Report was adopted:

President—Rev. SPENCER H. CONE, D. D.

Vice Presidents—Rev. A. Maclay, D. D., New-York; Rev. R. W. Eaton, D. D., Professor in Madison University, N. Y.; Rev. Wm. C. Duncan, Professor in Louisiana University, New-Orleans; Rev. J. G. Cocken, Germany; Rev. T. G. Jones, Norfolk; A. D. Kelly, Esq., Baltimore; Rev. S. W. Lynd, D. D., President of the Western Theological Institute, Ky.; Rev. Thornton Stringfellow, Va.; Wilson G. Hunt, N. Y.; Rev. Wm. Norton, Egham, England; Rev. John Winter, Wheeling, Va.; Rev. E. Adkins, Professor in Shurtleff College, Upper Alton, Illinois; Hon. Isaac Davis, Mass.; Rev. John L. Waller, LL.D., Kentucky; Rev. A. Wheelock, N. Y.; Rev. Q. H. Trottman, N. C.; Elder Alex. Campbell, President of Bethany College, Va.; Hon. Thos. Swain, N. J.; Eli Kelly, Esq., New-York; Rev. Wm. H. Marsh, D. D., London, England; Rev. James Tyler, D. D., Toronto, C. W.; Rev. J. E. Bill, St. John, N. B.; Thomas P. Miller, Esq., Mobile; Elder James Shannon, President of the University of the State of Missouri; Rev. Duncan S. Campbell, LL. D., President of Georgetown College, Ky.; Rev. Thomas Armitage, D. D., N. Y.; Rev. Wm. Carey Crane, Mass.; E. James, Esq., Albany, N. Y.; Rev. James Lyon, Cincinnati, Ohio; C. W. Thomas, Esq., Hastings.

Corresponding Secretary—WM. H. WYCKOFF.

Recording Secretary—E. S. WHITNEY.

Treasurer—WILLIAM COLGATE.

Auditor—SYLVESTER PIER.

Managers—three years—Samuel Baker, Wm. Hillman, Orvin B. Judd, Samuel R. Kelly, Eleazar Parmly, James M. Shaw, Stephen Wilkins, L. G. Marsh, J. B. Demarest.

Two Years—George Abbe, D. F. Jones, Joseph W. Burdet, D. S. Farnsworth, S. E. Shepard, John W. Sarles, Isaac T. Smith, E. H. Tripp, W. H. Wentworth.

One Year—Thomas Armitage, C. A. Buckbee, E. J. Eddy, C. J. Hoskins, Wm. D. Murphy, Stephen Remington, James E. Townsend, John E. Wells, W. T. Dugan.

The seventh article of the Constitution was so amended as to make the Executive Board consist of twenty-seven managers, instead of twenty-four, as hitherto.

GENERAL MEETING.

At the adjournment of the business meeting, the public anniversary meeting was opened in the Church. Dr. CONE took his seat on the rostrum—Hon. Judge SWAIN, N. J.; W. H. WYCKOFF, Esq., Corresponding Secretary, and W. COLGATE, Esq., Treasurer, occupying seats by his side.

At the close of the religious exercises, W. COLGATE, Esq., read the Treasurer's Report, as follows:

Receipts	$40,528 19
Expenditures	36,378 60
Balance	$5,150 59

This Society, having nothing financially to depend upon but the benevolence of its friends for the prosecution and completion of the work in which it has engaged, it will be proper for me to say,

The large sum of money reported as received by the Union during the past year has been contributed in small sums.

Only $750 has been given in sums exceeding $100; excepting a special donation from a friend in Australia, GEORGE FIFE ANGAS, who remitted to the treasury $350 for the Spanish Scriptures.

Subscriptions made, but not yet paid, amount to $140,000.

The adoption of the report was moved by Rev. S. K. WHITEMAN, in a forcible speech, ably seconded by Rev. CHAS. FERGUSON, of Baltimore, and carried without dissent.

Rev. D. W. MURPHY, (Oliver-street Church,) spoke warmly in advocacy of the principle sustained by the American Bible Union. His observations were received with marked approbation.

Subsequently, the President delivered his annual address.

He said: Of all denominations, Baptists have most strenuously and efficiently battled for unrestricted religious liberty. From the time when John the Baptist was imprisoned for freedom of speech, to the time of JOHN BUNYAN, who suffered for the same crime; and from the time of the ingenious dreamer to the formation of the American Bible Union, they have been bold to declare and maintain their views of truth. They never could endure to receive their religion by inheritance instead of conviction, or yield up their souls to the domination of Popes, Kings, Councils, or Assemblies.

Brethren and Friends: I was born and bred a freeman, and am too old now to learn the language, or wear the fetters of bondage. Yea, more, I trust I am one of Christ's freemen, and the children of the kingdom should not become subject to human tradition. There is no sacredness in a translation, except just so far as it pictures forth the original, just so far as it develops the features of divine truth. All else is refuse, and should be removed. Shall we hesitate to filter and clarify the water we drink because past generations have partaken of its impurities?

Some persons have endeavored to prejudice the minds of our friends by the preposterous rumor, that the work, when finished, will be so dear that men of ordinary means cannot purchase it. This rumor is, no doubt, founded upon our present publications, which are designed chiefly for criticism. When the New Testament is finished, we expect to issue it, in its cheapest forms, for a shilling a copy, if not for less. We are laboring mainly not for the learned or the rich, although they will be benefited by the results of our labors; we are labering emphatically for the masses—for the poor and the ignorant, IN ALL LANDS; not forgetting our own beloved country.

Thus far the hopes of friends are realized, and the predictions of foes are unfulfilled. But above all these things we have constantly enjoyed the soul-comforting assurance that the God of Jacob has been our refuge and strength.

At the termination of the President's address,

W. WYCKOFF, Esq., read the Annual Report, of which we present an abstract, as subjoined:

The revised Italian Testament by Dr. ACHILLI is printed. The revision of the French Scriptures is not pressed. Rev. J. G. ONCKEN is enlisted in the work for the German Scriptures.

The financial growth of the Union is almost without precedent. Its history may be condensed into a single brief sentence. The receipts of the first short year were, in round numbers, $5,000; of the second year, $10,000; of the third, $16,000; of the fourth, $32,000; and of this, the fifth year, more than $35,000.

During the last year the Union has published the report, and other official documents and biblical intelligence in a quarterly periodical, entitled The Bible Union Reporter. The favor with which this has been received, encourages the Board to continue it, and it recognizes the Reporter as its only official organ.

Numerous additions to the Library have been made within the year.

Rev. A. J. EDDY, of Brooklyn, in a lengthened address, contended that Baptist preaching and Baptist literature for the last two hundred years, advocate the principles of the American Bible Union. He concluded by moving the acceptance of the Report.

Hon. Judge SWAIN seconded the motion, which, on being put, was carried unanimously.

It was then announced that the afternoon and evening meetings would be opened at the hours respectively of 3 and 7½ o'clock.

The PRESIDENT nominated the following gentlemen as committees, and the nominations were approved.

Spanish Scriptures.—Messrs. Armitage, Newton, Hill, Wilkins, Smith and Armstrong.

German Scriptures.—Dr. Sheppard, and Messrs. Bowen, Brown, Keyes, Lillybridge and Taylor.

English Scriptures.—Messrs. Pendleton, Baldwin, Hopkins, Burnett, and Parmelee.

The President read the subjoined notice:

At a preliminary meeting of the friends of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, held in the Lecture-room of the Meeting-house of the First Baptist Church, on Tuesday, the 3d inst., Rev. Dr. Cone presiding, and Rev. C. S. Keyes, Secretary, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted.

Whereas, The Executive Board of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, in direct opposition to the known and expressed wish of many of its oldest friends and contributors, has resolved to occupy rooms in the building of the American Foreign Bible Society; therefore,

Resolved, That we appoint a Committee on Business whose duty it shall be to draft resolutions, and to suggest such other course of action as may be deemed advisable in view of these circumstances, and to report the same at a meeting to be called by them, of persons who are opposed to the late action of the Board, and who are in favor of an INDEPENDENT LOCATION for the Home Mission Society, for Friday evening, the 6th inst., in the Meeting-house of the First Baptist Church, in this City.

In accordance with the above directions, the Committee freely invite all persons embraced in the resolution, to meet in the Meeting-house of the First Baptist Church, corner of Broome and Elizabeth-streets, on Friday evening, the 6th inst., at 7½ o'clock, when resolutions will be presented, and addresses will be delivered in reference to the subject of the meeting.

THOS. ARMITAGE,
G. B. JUDD,
JAMES EDMONDS,
FRANK BENNINGTON,
G. BRINKERHOFF, } Committee.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 3, 1854.

The morning session closed with Prayer by Rev. Dr. DEVAN, returned Missionary from France.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The attendance was unprecedentedly large.

The President took his seat at 3 o'clock, and Rev. L. G. MARSH offered prayer.

The annexed Committees, with the approbation of the meeting, were then constituted by the President.

German Scriptures.—Messrs Remington, Clapp, McCarthy, Barker and Edmonds.

French Scriptures.—Messrs. Young, Graves, Adams, Williams and Yearnshaw.

In consideration of the recent deaths of Senor John Calderon, Dr. James Thompson, Dr. J. Gray, and Rev. Aaron Angier, the following Committee on obituaries was appointed:

James Challer, Philadelphia; Perry Davis, Providence; N. L. Fuller, N. H.; Zeno Gale, N. J.; D. M. Cornell, N. Y.

The Committee on Arrangements presented their report, recommending a particular order of business for the remainder of the anniversary.

Rev. S. BAKER, of Williamsburg, was introduced by the President, and delivered a lengthened and most interesting address, apropos of the following resolution:

Resolved, That in our efforts to secure a corrected version of the Bible in the English language, we derive encouragement from the conviction that we are acting in accordance with God's revealed will, and treading in the footsteps of many of the great and good men, who, through faith and patience, have entered into the possession of promised blessings.

He gave a succinct account of the various English translations that have been made from the original text of the sacred Scriptures, and reviewed the position occupied, since the time of the writing of the Pentateuch, by the inspired volume, in all subsequent ages, and among all nations which have recognized it as of divine origin. After showing that all English translators have admitted the possibility of mistake and imperfection in their works, he urged the duty of continuing the work they had begun.

Rev. L. T. MOORE seconded the resolution submitted by the last speaker. It was carried unanimously.

The President exhibited a copy of Dr. ACHILLI's revised translation of the Italian Testament, 30,000 copies of which, he said, some of the translator's countrymen were about to have published at their own expense, on the confines of Northern Italy.

He also showed a specimen copy of the German Scriptures published under the care of Dr. ONCKEN, with the Society's imprint. Dr. ONCKEN had sent three hundred of them here for sale and distribution among the Germans in this City. The business of the afternoon meeting was closed by the reading of a letter from Dr. CONANT, of Rochester University, followed by singing and Benediction.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at half past 7 o'clock, the Church being very full.

Rev. C. H. REMINGTON offered prayer.

Rev. J. M. PENDLETON, of Kentucky—a Delegate from the Bible Revision Association located at Louisville, Ky.—made the opening address of the evening. He discussed the general principles upon which is based the action of the American Bible Union, and was particularly severe upon Mr. JOHN N. WILDER, of Albany—a gentleman who addressed the American and Foreign Bible Society, (Anti-New Version,) at Philadelphia, in May last. And there were many, he held, like Judge JONES, of Philadelphia, who could not understand why the Scriptures should be revised. That gentleman's philosophy he denounced as faulty. Attention was directed to the words of the instruction given by the Bible Union to its Revisers, directing them to "Make the common English Version the basis of a Revised Version." The Union certainly wished to see the Revised Version, when it comes out, circulated among the people. It is not made for angels, but for men. The Union does not, however, desire to shake the confidence of the people in the common English Version. Mr. PENDLETON repelled the charge of sectarianism brought against the operation of the Union by Mr. WILDER, in his recent speech. The speaker was a Baptist, the son of a Baptist, yet he stood and declared in the presence of all, were a revised Scripture to destroy the Baptist denomination entirely from off the face of the earth he would say, Let God's truth be told in our native tongue, as it is already told in the Hebrew and the Greek. Mr. PENDLETON was especially earnest in defending the Union from the charge of sectarianism. He discussed the meaning of the words baptō and baptizo, with the English terms dip and immerse, and held that the word denoting action cannot express the attendant circumstances. The great question is, not what will be the consequences of revision, but, do revision right. Mr. P. was spicy, in his allusions. The opposition manifested to the revised version he considered entirely gratuitous, unless, indeed, it were placed on the same footing as the objections urged by "a sister," whom he once heard objecting to a new translation of the Scriptures, because she wanted to read the same Bible that her mother read. This was, he said, unanswerable. At all events, he should not attempt to answer it. [Laughter.] If he were to do so, he might be accused of unchivalrous conduct, and might, moreover, derange Dr. DEWLINE's touching references to the "Family Bible that lay on the stand."

Mr. PENDLETON closed with a feeling allusion to the labors, the declining years, and the domestic trials of Dr. CONE.

Dr. CONE announced the programme for to-day. In the morning, Brother YOUNG, of Kentucky, will address the Convention; and Brother BURNET, of Ohio, in the afternoon. Another meeting for conversation will be held between 9 and 10 o'clock, in the Lecture-room of the Broome-street Church.

This Evening, the friends of Home Missions will meet in the Lecture-room of the same Church, to devise measures for procuring a suitable building for the Baptist Home Mission Society.

THE USURY LAW.

MEETING OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Report of the Special Committee.

The Chamber of Commerce held its regular meeting, yesterday, at the Merchants' Bank, Wall-street, P. PERIT, Esq., presiding.

Messrs. SAMUEL G. GLIDDON and JOHN BARBER were elected members of the Board.

Mr. CALEB BARSTOW, Chairman of the Special Committee, submitted the following report upon the subject of

REPORT ON USURY.

The Committee began their report with a review of Legislative action in this State in reference to the Usury Laws; and added a summary of the reasons that are urged for and against such a measure. The views of Dr. DEWEY in regard to the origin of coinage are quoted with commendation, and the Committee then adds:

The principle that the incorporating any bank, or institution for dealing in money, invests the giver of any such act with a right to govern the price of money is, in the opinion of your Committee, entirely wrong.

All the tendencies of the present day require freedom in our currency movements. Our title to our money is as perfect and absolute as is our title to any other item of our property. In regard, then, to the rate of interest on loans of capital, we need only to ask Government to determine some proper or suitable maximum rate to govern in the absence of any contract, also a maximum rate to accrue upon a deferred judgment in law, after its rendition; and then leave individuals and banks, and other incorporations, entirely free to make any bargains they please, upon any description of loan or credit that can be conceived of, subordinate only to the same rules and principles that govern in all other human covenants and obligations.

More than two-thirds of the States of our Union have made honorable progress towards the full consummation at which your Committee are aiming. Some twenty-two of our States have now Usury laws so lenient as merely to forfeit the interest upon usurious transactions, and this relaxation has in all cases been found satisfactory.

It certainly would redound to the honor of this great State, to take forthwith one step ahead of all her compeers, and stand on the proud eminence of entire freedom in so important an element in our social compact as is the "Medium of Exchange."

It remains now for your Committee to allude to some other of the minor arguments of our opponents. It occurs, first, to notice their long-continued and pertinacious allegations that lenders and usurers are the only party asking a relaxation in our Usury laws. This is summarily met and overthrown by our having proof that almost every one of the very numerous signers to our memorials for relief, are borrowers for the "legitimate purposes of useful business;" they having also the right to borrow for any purpose seeming to themselves proper, and to lend when they choose. It is to be hoped that a proper regard for fairness will induce our opposing friends to drop entirely that feature in their remarks, and meet us honestly and candidly upon the common sense aspects of the subject.

Another point touched by the friends of restriction is, that rigid Usury Laws help to check wild speculation in our new States. Much is said about Wisconsin, because that State was named in a sort of text pamphlet for the Restrictionists, which was republished in 1850. It is said that some of the farmers became so discouraged there, as to go to California, where—by the 'by—they never had, and probably never will have, any restrictive Usury Laws. No proof has ever been shown that speculation was ever aggravated in new countries for want of legislative tinkering. Wild speculation will occasionally find its way into all new States, whether they do, or do not, have Usury Laws. No matter what human laws are enacted, we have always had, and shall always continue to have, occasional indiscretions in trade as well in new as in old States. It is the most fanciful absurdity to suppose we can prevent this by now and then turning a legislative screw. All experience, from the earliest records of history, shows the futility

THE LORING TRAGEDY.

Trial of Robert H. Graham, M. D., for the Murder of Col. Charles Loring.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

THURSDAY, Oct. 5.

Before Hon. Judge Mitchell.

Reported Specially for the Daily Times, by Roberts and Warburton.

The public interest felt in this trial has in no way abated, judging from the crowded state of the Court-room during the day. Dr. Graham was accompanied by his wife and a few friends. The absence of a Juror caused half an hour's delay.

Bridget Caffrey, called and sworn: Examined by the District Attorney—On the 2d of Aug. last, I was employed at the St. Nicholas, as an assistant to the housekeeper; I recognize the prisoner, Dr. Graham; I only saw him once; I did not know Col. Loring, more than to know that he was killed; I was on the second floor, nearly opposite the mirror, about 5½ o'clock in the morning; I saw Dr. Graham and Col. Loring standing at the head of the stairs; Dr. Graham had one hand upon Col. Loring, and the other held a sword, which was in Col. Loring's side; Col. Loring staggered, and hallooed, "I am stabbed!—I am dead!" three times; I saw Col. Loring stagger and fall; and I saw Mr. Rogers, one of the officers, try to hold him up, but could not; I went over to look at Col. Loring; he groaned heavily a few times, and expired in about three minutes.

Q.—What did Dr. Graham do? A.—Dr. Graham walked to the head of Col. Loring, and put the sword-cane behind his back; some one said, "You have killed him," but he replied, "Oh, no!" Dr. Graham then went down stairs slowly, with the sword-cane in his hand; the point was bent.

Q.—(Showing cane)—Is that the cane you saw? A.—It is like it.

P.—Did you see Dr. Graham afterwards? A.—I saw him at the office before he went with the police officer; I did not see what he did with the sword-cane.

Q.—During the difficulty between Dr. Graham and Col. Loring, did you see any blow struck? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you see either take hold of the other? A.—No, Sir; they might before I came to the head of the stairs.

Q.—Did you see them have hold of each other? A.—No; Dr. Graham was sideways towards Col. Loring; the Doctor had one hand upon the Colonel, while the other hand held the sword-cane.

Q.—Did you see either of them have hold of the other except as you stated in your last answer? A.—No, Sir.

Cross-examined by Mr. Whiting—This occurred on the 2d of August; I got up about 5½ o'clock; I slept in the housekeeper's room, on the fourth floor, middle building; I had ever slept myself that morning; I was called at my own room, but I was not there; I did not take more than five minutes to dress; when I came down the stairs to the third floor I heard a noise—loud talking; I ran down the stairs a few steps on the second flight; when there I was in a position that I could see over the parties; when I got there, the sword was in Col. Loring's side; I saw Col. Loring stagger.

Q.—When you came down stairs you say you saw Dr. Graham's left hand on Col. Loring; can you say on what part of his person he had his hand? A.—No, Sir; I saw the sword cane in his right hand, I think; the sword was in Col. Loring's side; Dr. Graham twisted his hand, and pulled out the sword; as I stood on the stairs, Dr. Graham was nearest to me.

Q.—How close were they together when you saw them? A.—They were quite close—so close that their bodies touched; I did not see Col. Loring's arms, or hands; could not say if his hands were up; Col. Loring moved about three yards before he fell; when he fell, I came down on the landing; I was not examined before the Coroner; was never examined about it until I came to the District Attorney's office, about two weeks since; spoke to no one else about it.

To a Juror—When Col. Loring was stabbed, he staggered right direct from Dr. Graham; not around him but directly from him.

Margaret Noles, sworn, examined by the District Attorney: On the 2d of August last I was chambermaid in the St. Nicholas; I never saw Dr. Graham until I saw him that morning; never saw Col. Loring until that morning; about 5½ o'clock I was sweeping and dusting the gentlemen's parlor.

Q.—Where did the parties stand? A.—They were standing at the head of the stairs; there was loud talk, and I could not say which talked angry; I looked out and I saw the two gentlemen "in holts;" one of them had hold of the other.

Q.—Did you do anything? A.—I never stirred out of the room; I think I was five or six yards from them.

Q.—Did you look at them all the time? A.—I may have taken my eyes off them for a moment; I don't suppose I did anything; I stood in the same place; I heard Col. Loring say he was stabbed, and he staggered and fell; when he fell, I got so nervous that I could not go near them; Dr. Graham went down the public stairway, with the sword-cane in his hand: it was bent in his hand—(sword-cane shown)—it was like that; saw Dr. Graham turn into the pantry below stairs, and throw the sword-cane in there.

Cross-examined by Mr. Whiting—The number of the gentlemen's parlor I was sweeping is, I think, 13; it is the first parlor to the right-hand as you come up one flight of stairs from the office.

Q.—From the beginning to the end of the affray did you remain in that room? A.—Until I heard Col. Loring cry out he was stabbed.

Q.—How far inside of the room did you stand? A.—I was dusting a centre table in the middle of the floor.

Q.—Did you stand there all the time? A.—I am not sure that I went to the door, and I am sure I did not go outside until Col. Loring fell.

By Mr. Shepard—The parlor is on the Mercer-street side.

Michael Fox, sworn—Examined by the District Attorney: On the 2d of August last, I was a waiter in the St. Nicholas, and on duty that morning; I saw Dr. Graham and Col. Loring together about 5½ o'clock in the morning, at the head of the left stairs, on the first floor above the office; I was at the other side of the staircase, about five feet distant; they both appeared angry and had high words; I could not hear what was said, except the word lie; I could not tell which used the expression; both were talking equally loud; Dr. Graham stood with his back towards Mercer-street, and Col. Loring with his back towards Broadway; I turned round to speak to Joseph Cozzens about some matters, when in a moment they clenched together; Dr. Graham had his two arms around Col. Loring, and Col. Loring was endeavoring to push him away; as soon as they separated, I say the dagger in Dr. Graham's hand; it was bent like a reaping hook; (identified the sword-cane;) Col. Loring staggered and fell; Dr. Graham stood with the weapon in his hand, looked at Col. Loring quite calm, and went down stairs.

Q.—Were any blows struck as you saw? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—What position were Col. Loring's hands in? A.—On the shoulders of Dr. Graham, as if pushing him away.

Q.—Whereabouts was the right hand of Dr. Graham? A.—On the left side of Col. Loring.

Q.—How long were the parties together? A.—About two minutes; perhaps not so much; they were moving at the time; they did not move more than two or three feet from where they commenced the quarrel; they moved towards the mirror.

Q.—At what period of the occurrence did they begin to move? A.—They were together when they began to move.

Q.—Did you hear any noise but that of the conversation? A.—No.

Q.—Had Dr. Graham a hat on? A.—Yes; it might have fallen off.

Q.—Did you notice whether one of the parties was more excited than the other?

Mr. O'Conor objected to the question, as calling for the witness' opinion upon the state of mind of either of the parties.

Mr. Shepard spoke in support of the question.

His Honor ruled it out.

Q.—What was the appearance of Dr. Graham?

Mr. O'Conor considered the question indefinite.

A.—At that time Dr. Graham did not appear more angry than Col. Loring.

Cross-examined by Mr. Whiting—Have been a waiter in the St. Nicholas a few months; had been in the Prescott House three months, and several other places, too numerous to mention; wanted to see Cozzens on business of his own that morning; had got out of the dining-hall, and met Cozzens at the head of the stairs; talked to him a few minutes; during the time, my attention was partly taken up by him, and partly by the quarrel between the two gentlemen; Joseph Cozzens stood with his right side towards him; at that time Dr. Graham's back was towards me, and Col. Loring's face toward me; they were close to the mat at the head of the stairs.

Q.—When the parties were clinched, did they move towards you? A.—No; they moved towards the mirror.

Q.—Did the Doctor move backwards? A.—No; he moved forwards, two or three feet, and Col. Loring moved backwards; he wanted to get off; Col. Loring had his hands on Dr. Graham's shoulders, and in this way went back; saw Dr. Graham's hands around Col. Loring's waist; I did not see the sword until after they separated; I then saw it in Dr. Graham's hand.

A Juror—You say you know the sword-cane by the image on the handle. How did you see that when in Dr. Graham's hand? A.—He slung it between his fingers; and I took particular notice of the carved image; did not see Dr. Graham twist the sword-cane, or make any motion with his hand, while the sword was in the side of Col. Loring.

James Anderson, sworn—Examined by the District Attorney: Q.—What was your business on the 2d of August last? A.—I was employed as head rotunda man in the St. Nicholas Hotel.

Q.—Do you know Dr. Graham by sight? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you know Col. Loring by sight? A.—No, Sir; I did not see him until that morning.

Q.—At what hour was that? A.—About 5½ or 20 minutes to 6 o'clock.

Q.—Did you see the parties together then? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—State what you first saw? A.—They were on the landing on the second floor.

Q.—By the second floor you mean the first floor above the office? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Now state what you saw? A.—At that time I was below stairs, near the office, when I heard a shout like "Oh!" I called upon a porter near me to come along—

Mr. Whiting—Never mind repeating anything you said to another person.

Mr. Shepard—State what you did and saw yourself.

Witness—When I ran up to the second-floor, the first thing I saw was the dead man lying upon his face; Dr. Graham was standing there; he walked past the deceased, stood at his head, and looked at him; he had a dagger in his hand, bent.

Q.—What did he do with the sword-cane? A.—When looking at Col. Loring he shifted the dagger from his right hand to his left, and pulled the blade through his left hand.

Q.—Repeat that. A.—He looked down upon the dead man, drew the dagger through his left hand, and carrying it in his right hand, walked past the deceased towards the mirror; seeing himself in the mirror he turned and walked down stairs.

Q.—Where did he then go? A.—He went to the "pitcher room," as we call it.

Q.—What did he do when he went down to the "pitcher room," as you call it? A.—He threw the dagger into the closet, and tried to cover it; I was behind him, and went in and picked it up.

Q. (Showing dagger)—Can you say whether that is the dagger? A.—Yes, Sir, that is it.

Q.—Were you present when the prisoner was arrested? A.—Yes. It was about 15 minutes after the death of Col. Loring.

Q.—Had he any opportunity of changing his dress during that time? A.—I think not, Sir. He wore a coat, pants and hat, but had no cravat; could not say if he had on a vest.

Cross-examined by Mr. Whiting—I saw the scabbard of the sword-cane that morning in the office; I believe John Conahen brought it there; I saw him bring it to the office-door and hand it to the policeman.

Q.—How was Col. Loring dressed? A.—He had a frock-coat on; but I believe no cravat.

[On the suggestion of Mr. Whiting, the Court took a recess for twenty minutes to allow the Jury to get some refreshments.]

John Morris, sworn and examined by the District Attorney—My business on the 2d of August last was in the Rotunda of the St. Nicholas Hotel.

Q.—Do you know Dr. Graham? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you know Col. Loring? A.—I saw him.

Q.—Did you see them together on the morning of the 2d of August? A.—I did; I was going up stairs, and heard a noise of a man crying out, "I'm killed;" I went right up stairs; when I got up stairs, they were letting go of each other; Dr. Graham had his hands around Col. Loring—both hands; I did not notice Col. Loring's hands much; when Dr. Graham let go, Col. Loring ran two or three yards and fell; he lay there groaning; Dr. Graham came up and looked at him; some one said he was dead; Dr. Graham said, "No, nothing is the matter with him."

Q.—Did he say anything else? A.—No; he walked down stairs with the sword in his hand, and threw it into the closet; while going down, the handle was exposed, so that you could see the carving.

Q.—Had you seen Dr. Graham before that morning? A.—Not to know him.

Cross-examined by Mr. Whiting—Was examined before the Coroner's Inquest; did not know that he had talked the matter over much; had talked of it with his fellow-servants; could not name them; could not recollect where he talked of it last; had been out shaking mats in the street, and was returning with them.

Q.—Had you taken the mats from the head of the stairs that morning to shake? A.—I cannot say whether I had taken the mats from the head of the stairs; I threw the mats I had in my hand down in a heap at the head of the stairs; I was in a fright at what I saw.

Q.—Were you not so much frightened that you could not tell what was doing? A.—I have stated what I saw.

Firman B. Stage sworn: examined by Mr. Shepard—I am a police officer; remember seeing Dr. Graham at the St. Nicholas Hotel on the night of the 1st of August.

Q.—Where was Dr. Graham on that night?

Mr. O'Conor objected to the question as irrelevant.

Witness testified that he had seen the prisoner the night before, and identified the sword-cane produced as one he had seen with him on that night.

Isaac Johnson examined by Mr. Shepard—Was a police-officer; saw the prisoner on the morning of the 2d of August last, at the St. Nicholas Hotel; arrested him on that morning, between 6 and 7 o'clock; he had on a coat, pants, shirt, shoes and stockings.

Q.—Did he say anything to you in reference to a bell? A.—Yes; he said he had rang his bell several times for the waiters; that no waiter would come; that he then went into the hall and rang the hall-bell; he said he was insulted by a man; he said he had a difficulty with the man in the hallway; he said the man struck him, and called him a scoundrel; he said nothing more in regard to this matter, except his reason for ringing the bell; he said he was very thirsty in the morning, and rang the bell for the waiter to bring him a bottle of congress water; furthermore, he said that the man had had him by the neck, and choked him.

Mrs. Cornelia Loring, recalled and sworn. Examined by Mr. Shepard:

Q.—What did your husband say to the man who rang the bell?

Mr. O'Conor objected, and contended that there was not sufficient evidence to identify Dr. Graham with the person who rang the hall-bell violently, and who was addressed by Col. Loring. The admission of Dr. Graham, introduced through the officer, only went to show that he had rung the bell. A bell placed in the long hall of a hotel filled with strangers was likely to be used at will by any one. Was it, then, to be assumed that because Dr. Graham had rung the bell that morning, he was the person whom Col. Loring had addressed.

Mr. Shepard followed in an argument, to show that the confession of Dr. Graham to the police officer sufficiently identified him with the person who disturbed Col. Loring and his wife by ringing the bell in the hall, and that he was, consequently, the person with whom Col. Loring had conversed. This being so, there could be no objection to Mrs. Loring's testifying to the conversation that then took place.

His Honor decided that the evidence tending to identify Dr. Graham with the person who rang the bell, was sufficient to go to the Jury, and he would therefore admit the testimony of Mrs. Loring as to the conversation.

Mr. O'Conor took exception to the ruling of the Court, which was entered.

[During the discussion Mrs. Loring became so ill that she was obliged to leave the Court. Subsequently Mr. Shepard handed up a medical certificate to the Court, stating that she was then unable to bear an examination.]

Mr. Shepard asked for an adjournment, in view of Mrs. Loring's illness.

Mr. O'Conor was anxious, on behalf of his client, that the trial should not be delayed, and suggested that the examination of the witnesses be proceeded with.

Christopher Dooley—sworn: Examined by Mr. Shepard. On the 2nd of August last, I was watchman at the St. Nicholas Hotel; I was on from 12 o'clock at night to 12 in the day.

Q. Do you know the number of Col. Loring's door? A. Yes—No. 247. The number of Dr. Graham's was 257; I went into the hall of which the bed-rooms were, about ten minutes after 5 o'clock, to finish the putting out of the gas; at that time I met no person in the hall; after that, between 5 and 6 o'clock, I saw Col. Loring: he was about three yards from the reception-room, on the second floor; did not look at any watch or clock after 5 o'clock; at the time I saw Col. Loring I saw no person up except the chambermaid; there is a maid's bell outside of room No. 247 on the corridor; it is pretty high up on the wall, has a pole comes down by which to ring it; it is only for chambermaids, and does not ring in the office; there is no other bell on the wall except that at No. 247; when Col. Loring came to me he told me that a gentleman was making a noise; I went to look for the gentleman that was making the noise, and Colonel Loring went down to the office; I saw no person; I was a minute and a half or two minutes away, going through the corridors, when I went down to the office and saw Col. Loring lying dead; the breath was just leaving him.

Q.—How long after Col. Loring left you was it until you saw him dead? A.—Not more than two minutes at the very most; I helped to carry the body into room No. 16, and was left in charge of it.

Margaret Leonard sworn and examined by Mr. Shepard—On the 2d of August last I was chambermaid in the St. Nicholas Hotel; I heard a bell ring on the second floor, in the corridor which runs from Spring-street entry; it was after 5 o'clock; I came up to answer it; there was no person standing in the corridor; I waited, and saw a person standing at the door of No. 247; I went away; I do not know who the person was; Col. Loring occupied the room; I told the man to ring his bed-room bell.

To the Court—It was Col. Loring's room, and I suppose it was Col. Loring who was standing at the door, but could not tell who it was; did not know Col. Loring.

Dr. David Uhl, called and sworn, and examined by Mr. Shepard.—Q.—Did you make an examination of a body, in the early part of August last, at the St. Nicholas Hotel? A.—I did.

Q.—Do you know whose body it was? A.—The body of Col. Loring.

Q.—Who aided you in that examination? A.—Dr. Quackenbosh.

Q.—Were there any other medical gentlemen present upon that occasion? A.—A gentleman named Dr. Randolph, and Dr. Payne came in after the post mortem was completed.

Q.—Will you state what the condition of that body was? A.—I found, on examining the body, a slight abrasion at the corner of the left eye; also, one just over the left eye-brow; I also found a punctured wound on the back, five inches to the left of the spinal column, and twelve inches from the middle of the shoulders below; the wound entered between the ninth and tenth ribs, and passed upwards and forwards into the substance of the lungs; the cavity of the chest was filled with a large amount of blood; the wounds were, no doubt, the cause of death; there were no other marks of violence upon the body.

Q.—Will you state, Sir, what sort of instrument in your judgment, would be adequate to the production of such a wound? A.—Such a thing as a sword cane.

Q.—What was the condition of the left lung? A.—It was much lacerated.

Q.—Will you describe how much it was lacerated? A.—The sword passed along the root of the lung—that is the back part of the lung—and it was lacerated considerably forward in front. There was quite a laceration of 2 or 3 inches. It was lacerated backwards towards the front of the lung.

Q.—Now state again, Doctor, the extent of that laceration. A.—It must have been of a width of at least two or three inches; the lung was more or less torn.

Q.—Which do you mean to say, two or three inches? A.—Yes, three inches; I do not mean to say that the depth of the wound was three inches; the depth of the wound was about nine inches.

Q.—Will you describe the form of that laceration? A.—The lungs are very spongy in the exterior, and when they are lacerated the wound is not very well defined; but it appears to me that in the case of Col. Loring the sword had been pressed forward into the front of the chest to produce laceration; they were lacerated from back forwards.

Q.—Will you describe the outline form of the laceration, if you please? A.—It was a wound about ten inches deep, and then the lung was lacerated and torn forward through, as if it had been cut or torn.

Q.—Could you discriminate between the edges of the lungs which were cut and those which were torn. A.—I could tell that the edges were torn; that the instrument was not a cutting instrument, but that they were punctured with a pointed one; the lungs appeared to be torn and not cut.

Q.—That is the great difference between lacerated and incised wounds? A.—yes.

Mr. Whiting—This was not what you would call an incised wound? A.—No, it was not an incised wound.

Mr. Shepard—Can you form any judgment as to the position in which the parties must have been when that wound was inflicted? A.—Do you mean from the direction of the wound, and the wound itself?

Q.—Yes. A.—Taking all the circumstances of its being in the back and the peculiar direction of the wound?

Q.—I ask you, can you from the direction of the wound, form any judgment which shall be sufficient and definite? A.—I should judge that it had been given while the parties were standing side by side with their faces towards each other, for the following reasons: Because the direction of the wound was upwards; that is not a wound that we would expect to find given by a person who is in front.

Mr. O'Conor—By a person who stood opposite the place of the wound? A.—Yes, Sir; if the person who was wounded had stood in front the wound would likely have been horizontal; but in this case it was not; it was a little forward, and the hand must have been very close to the body when it was given.

Mr. Shepard—Is there any other reason to think that the parties stood side by side, or face to face—one or the other? A.—No; I should judge chiefly from the direction of the wound.

Q.—What was the immediate cause of his death, Doctor? A.—Hemhorrage in the lungs, together with the mechanical impediments to breathing, which always take place in those cases.

Q.—What do you mean, by hemorrhage in the lungs? A.—I mean bleeding from the lungs—internal bleeding, of course.

Q.—What amount of blood was there which had flown into the cavity of the chest? A.—At least a quart.

Q.—Were any of the large vessels injured? A.—No. The large vessels attached to the heart were not wounded. The vessels behind the lungs were wounded.

Q.—I would ask you what was the vital part that was struck by the weapon which produced that wound? A.—The lung was the vital part.

Q.—Was there any other injury to the lung, which could have produced death? A.—No; there was not.

Q.—Now I want to ask you, if that had been a simple penetration of the lung, without any of this laceration which you have spoken of, what would have been the probable result? A.—It is very difficult to say; sometimes persons recover from a wound of the lung, and sometimes they do not.

Q.—But could any person have recovered from an injury involving that amount of lacerations? A.—I think not.

Q.—Why not? A.—The hemorrhage would be so great that it must evidently cause death.

Q.—But by puncture, made with an instrument similar to this, and which avoided all the larger vessels, I understand you to say that you think a person might have recovered? A.—Persons sometimes do recover from extensive wounds in the lungs.

Q.—Have you known an instance of that?

Mr. O'Conor objected to the question as leading.

The Court—I understand the question to be whether if such a wound of equal extent, without laceration, were inflicted, would it cause death? A.—That is a difficult question to answer.

Mr. Shepard—Assuming the instrument to have been straight?

Witness—Do you mean assuming it to have taken the same course as the wound in this case?

Mr. Shepard—Yes. A.—I do not think he could have recovered; sometimes a patient may recover of extensive wounds in the lung; but this was at the back of the lung, among the roots, where there are a great many pulmonary vessels; it is doubtful, under the circumstances, whether the patient could recover.

Q.—How long would a person live who had a simple, direct puncture in the same direction, and of the same depth to this you have stated, without any other laceration? A.—I do not know that I can answer that question.

Mr. O'Conor objecting, the question was reduced to writing, as follows:

Q.—Supposing a wound corresponding exactly with the wound which you found upon Col. Loring, in every other respect except the laceration, necessarily caused by the employment of a sword-cane, with a straight blade of that size, how long, in your judgment, would the wounded person survive?

Objected to and allowed—exception noted.

A.—That would depend a great deal upon circumstances; if the hemorrhage were external, out of the body, he might live some little time; but if it were internal, and he lay on his face, where the hemorrage would produce suffocation, death would be very speedy; it is impossible for me to state exactly the precise time a man could live under these circumstances.

Q.—Have you any means of arriving at any judgment which would be better than we could form upon such a subject? A.—Persons have lived fifteen minutes or half an hour; and with a very extensive wound, they have lived three hours, and longer.

The Court here adjourned to 10 o'clock this morning.

THE DEAF AND DUMB.

Second Anniversary of the Organization of St. Ann's Church.

If there is any class of unfortunates who seem to excite a warmer interest and a more generous sympathy than any others in the breasts of those who are favored with all of their senses unimpaired, the deaf mutes constitute that class. With the uneducated, whose mental visions are darkened and whose entire life cannot otherwise than be one of misanthropic experience, resulting from a consciousness of their being exceptions, more than mysterious to their minds, in the possession of certain endowments of nature bestowed upon the human race, the deepest pity for their abject condition cannot be otherwise than felt. But years subsequently, when, by the admirable system of instruction perfected by the Abbé Sicourn and his successors, the deaf mute is led to comprehend the nature of, his situation, to obtain a consciousness of his being an immortal soul, and has acquired a knowledge of history, science in art, and the ability to make himself, to a considerable extent, the equal of his fellows in the warfare of life—he commands the admiration of every enlightened person, and draws around him a circle of warm and devoted friends.

We have been led to indite this article from being present on Sunday afternoon last at the religious services, held in the Chapel of the New-York University, before the deaf mute communicants of St. Ann's Church, of which Rev. Thos. Gallaudet, the worthy son of the pioneer in the education of deaf mutes in America, is Rector. The occasion was the second anniversary of the organization of the Church. About forty deaf mutes were present, and some twenty-five persons who could speak. The services were those prescribed by the forms of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of course translated in the sign language; and though the rich and solemn tones of the organ and the harmonious chants of the choir, which always inspire the listener with a reverential awe, and prepare the mind for the reception and appreciation of the spiritual wealth about to be bestowed upon him, were absent, yet the quiet stillness seemed to more than compensate, as the most profound solemnity pervaded the Chapel. In the usual preliminary services, Mr. Gallaudet was assisted by Prof. Gamage, of the New-York Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, who is himself a mute.

The sermon was appropriate to the occasion. It recounted briefly the history of the past—their small beginning, the gradual progress they had made, the present condition of the affairs of the church, their hopes for the future—the loss which they in common with the whole church had sustained by the loss of their Provisional Bishop—and many other interesting facts and details which we have not the space to note. From all of these he drew instructive morals.

The discourse seemed to be comprehended perfectly by all of the deaf mutes in attendance, while the leading ideas in many of its portions were understood by others through the expressiveness of the pantomime.

The present state of the affairs of the church is as follows: A Sunday school is organized having three teachers and twelve pupils, some of whom are the children of deaf mute parents. There are twenty-five communicants, sixteen of whom are deaf mutes. The total amount of receipts for the year, including $300 from Trinity Church to pay the rent of the Chapel in the University, was $465 87½; the expenses during the same time were $419 45, leaving $46 42½ as the salary of the Rector, who aside from this has received no compensation. The fund for the sick and poor amounts to $82 77, of which $40 25 has been disbursed. In the contemplation of the erection of a church, the building fund has been increased to between $12,000 and $13,000, though the efforts of Mr. Gallaudet and the deaf-mute collection of the Society. A portion of this amount is to be appropriated soon for the purchase of four lots on Twenty-sixth-street, between Sixth and Seventh-avenues, to be used as a site for the proposed edifice. During the recent sitting of the Diocesan Convention the Church was regularly incorporated. The Wardens elected are: Messrs. Cyrus Curtiss and Robert B. Minturn; the Vestrymen were: Prosper M. Wetmore, Benj. R. Winthrop, Robt. Gracie, James W. Underhill, Chas. A. Budd, M. D. Gilbert, W. C. Gamage, Wm. M. Gunnt, and Josiah Jones—the three last mentioned being deaf-mutes. When the new Church is finished it is designed to have service in the morning and evening by the voice, and in the afternoon by pantomime. At present, however, no evening service is held, the morning being devoted to those who hear and speak, and the afternoon to the deaf-mutes. In conclusion, we would advise any who have never visited the church to do so, and manifest, by their presence at least, an interest in the spiritual welfare of the unfortunate deaf-mutes.

Educational.

Opening of Ward Primary School No. 56.—The new and beautiful edifice recently erected for Primary School No. 56, in Thirty-seventh-street, near Tenth-avenue, was opened on Tuesday last, the 3d inst., in presence of the School officers of the Ward, members of the Board of Education, the City Superintendent, and several distinguished gentlemen interested in the welfare of our public schools. A numerous and respectable audience was also in attendance.

Nelson J. Waterbury, Esq., one of the Commissioners of the Ward, and Chairman of the Board of School Officers, presided, and opened the exercises by a few general and pertinent remarks. He congratulated the residents of the Ward, and all interested in the cause of elementary education, on the transfer of the children attending the primary schools, from their present inconvenient location in the basements and ground floors of the schools, to a more spacious and commodious edifice, and invoked the coöperation of parents and teachers in the effort to fill the seats, and diffuse as widely as possible the benefits and blessings of education. The entire cost of the edifice, including the ground and furniture, he stated at $26,500. It afforded him heartfelt pleasure to witness so large an attendance, especially of ladies, on this occasion, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. After an earnest and eloquent exhortation to the teachers to discharge conscientiously and faithfully their whole duty, he introduced Hon. E. C. Benedict, President of the Board of Education.

Mr. Benedict delivered an animated and spirited address. He adverted to the duties and responsibilities devolving upon the Ward Officers, teachers, parents and pupils—the progress of educational reform in our city—and the numerous inducements to perseverance in the noble enterprise upon which he had entered.

The Hon. Joseph S. Bosworth, one of the Justices of the Superior Court, and formerly an active and efficient member of the Board of Education, followed in an able and pertinent address. He remarked that the erection of such a structure as the one in which they were assembled afforded a striking indication of the readiness which our fellow-citizens manifest in liberal appropriations for the cause of education, and commented upon the tendency of institutions of this kind to create and perpetuate a national and fraternal feeling. After paying a high compliment to the zeal, energy and public spirit with which this enterprise had been prosecuted by the officers of the Ward, he gave way to

Hon. Welcome R. Beebe, one of the Justices of the Criminal Court, who expatiated at considerable length, and with great animation and eloquence, upon the powerful influence which our public schools exerted in the diminution of crime and the advancement of good order and morality—expressed a deep interest in the progress and welfare of these elementary institutions of learning, and drew a vivid contrast between the schools of the present day and those of 20 years since.

Messrs. Brooks, of the Express, and Charles Tracy, Esq., of the Board of Education, having been prevented from attendance, their places in the programme prepared for the occasion were supplied by D. L. Farnham, Esq., of Fayetteville, Onondaga County, Thomas Childs, Jr., Esq., a resident of the Ward, and J. De Lamatyne, Esq., one of the Commissioners on the original organization of the Board, and who then represented the Sixteenth Ward, from which the Twentieth was subsequently taken.

Mr. Farnham adverted to the prevailing misconception in the rural districts of the character and pursuits of the inhabitants of the metropolis. A misconception aided by the sample police reports of a portion of the public press, and by the agents of mercantile houses, from which it would seem that the population was about equally divided between [illegible] and their detectives and pawnbrokers. This misconception, however, was speedily corrected by a visit to the City, and especially to its institutions for the promotion of primary education, and for the mitigation and relief of human wretchedness in all its aspects. New York was welcome to make all the money in her power, when it was thus worthily, nobly and benevolently expended. He referred to his own early experience in a country school, and contrasted it with the enlightened system now in vogue.

Mr. Childs, after having recognized in the speaker who preceded him an old and valued friend, whom he had not seen since childhood, and whom he little expected to meet on this occasion, made an earnest and eloquent appeal in behalf of the interests of education, enlarged upon the duties and responsibilities of the citizens of the Ward, and concluded by expressing the deep personal interest he himself felt in the successful issue of the noble enterprise upon which we have this day entered.

Mr. De Lamatyne urged upon all those interested in the school the importance and necessity of sustaining the liberal policy of the Board of Education, and the efforts and exertion of the school officers and teachers. He recapitulated the difficulties and embarrassments under which they had long struggled, and the numerous obstacles they had been forced to overcome, in their determination to bring the blessings of education within reach of all.

The exercises were closed by an address from S. S. Randall, the City Superintendent of Schools, who commented at considerable length upon the efficiency of well-organized, well-managed schools to diminish the growth and progress of crime, and to promote the highest and best interests of humanity. He earnestly exhorted parents and teachers to the most assiduous exertions for the broadcast diffusion of knowledge and virtue. We regret that the crowded state of our columns prevents us from giving a more full and detailed report of the addresses which were delivered on this interesting occasion. Professor Elder, of the Institution for the Blind, presided at the piano; and the exercises of the afternoon were enlivened by a serious of patriotic and school songs, by the children of Mr. Partridge's School, who were in attendance.

Too much credit cannot be bestowed upon the indefatigable exertions of the Commissioners of the ward, Messrs. Waterbury and Rowland, aided by the School officers, for the efficient discharge of the duty confided to them in the erection and completion of this building, and for the taste and skill displayed in its exterior and interior arrangements; and we trust the example thus set in the Twentieth Ward for the improvement and accommodations for our Primary Schools, will speedily be followed throughout the City.

Columbia College—Senatorial Investigation.

The Senate Committee met again yesterday at the College. It was decided that the following question, which has been already answered by Messrs. Ogden and Ruggles, be submitted to the other Trustees of the College, to be answered by them in writing at the next meeting of the Committee:

"Have the affairs of the College been so conducted both as to persons' apartments and course of study, as best to promote the government and education of the students belonging thereto; and if not, in what respect have the Trustees failed, and what has been the consequence of their neglect, if any, upon the general interests of the institution? If yes, state fully and particularly the party, time, and manner of such violation."

The following communication was received:

Columbia College, Wednesday, Oct. 4, 1854.

To the Committee of the Senate:

At a meeting of the General Committee of the Alumni of Columbia College, held on Wednesday, Oct. 4, 1854, Mr. Cornell, from the Committee appointed to wait on the Senate Committee, presented a communication from the Senate Chamber.

Whereupon it was received that the views of the Alumni are embodied in the report of this General Committee adopted by the Alumni, that the Sub-Committee of Communication with the Senate Committee be directed to attend the meeting of the Senate Committee on the 5th inst., and expressed the readiness and disposition of this Committee to furnish any information in their power bearing on the subject matter of the Senate investigation, and that the Sub-Committee be fully authorized to act for the General Committee in regard to such investigation. Extract from the minutes.

JOHN M. MASON, Secretary.

The Sub-Committee referred to appeared before the Senate Committee, but no information bearing upon the investigation was presented.

The Committee adjourned till 9th November.

The German Emigrants of New-York.

Rev. F. W. Boehn has published an account of his labors among the German emigrants of New-York for the year ending May, 1854. His object has been to point out to his countrymen, on their arrival in this City, the means of speedily improving their condition, and saving them from the dangers which commonly beset the unwary and ignorant stranger. Mr. Boehn, on seeing a crowd of German emigrants standing on the wharves, in Greenwich and the neighboring streets, gazing at the new sights that surround them, and undecisive as to their plans for the future, seizes the occasion to give them such advice as they are most in need of, and to distribute tracts containing useful information adapted to their circumstances. The attention paid to his remarks, the questions asked and thanks returned, justify the belief that the listeners are benefited by his efforts.

Another department of Mr. Boehn's missionary operations consists of his visits among the residences of the poor. The number of Germans living in New-York cannot be less than 80,000, and probably far exceeds that number. The majority of them reside in the eastern section of the City. The area between East Broadway, the Bowery and Fourth-street, as well as the avenues further up, on the border of each river, are densely peopled with Germans. In these and other quarters, Mr. Boehn has visited repeatedly, during the year, upwards of 1,900 families, in addition to his calls upon other residents in this as yet by no means thoroughly explored field.

The Germans there, he says, belong for the most part to the working classes, and compare well with other emigrants in respect to frugality and general uprightness. But greater attention to cleanliness and greater refinement, better cultivation of mind and heart, and more care for the education of children are needed. The desire of obtaining a livelihood seems to have swallowed up a regard for some of the most important duties. Children are allowed to run at large, picking rags, coal, chips, or selling matches and fruit, instead of being required to acquire the rudiments of good learning and good morals at school. The prospects of the next generation are not, therefore very auspicious.

Mr. Boehn has been commendably employed in rectifying these evils. In coöperation with the Children's Aid Society, he has established schools, filling them with German children. While engaged in his visits, he distributes pamphlets, of an instructive character, and copies of the New Testament; and wherever a case of extreme poverty has come to his notice, he has relieved it. Many a poor German has also been assisted by having employment procured for him, either in this city or in the country. A considerable number of men, women and children, and sometimes whole families, have been sent to the interior of the country during the last year and are doing well.

The sick and the prisoner have also been carefully and humanely visited by Mr. Boehn. To give an idea of the importance of missionary labors among the latter class, we need only mention the statement that, though the proportion of German criminals in this City is smaller than that of other nations, yet in the Tombs one may meet regularly every day with twenty or thirty, mostly young men between 18 and 35. The majority of charges are for assault or theft, but there are numerous instances of still graver offences.

Mr. Boehn mentions $662 as the total amount of subscriptions to his objects, nearly half of which sum was given by Germans themselves. Those who desire to extend further aid to him and his unfortunate countrymen, can find him at his office, in Clinton Hall.—Post.

Aid to Emigrants.

The Board of Managers of the American and Foreign Emigrant Protective and Employment Society, have held a special meeting, at which Mr. E. Jones, the Society's Agent in Liverpool, was present, and made an interesting report of the system of impositions under which emigrants suffer in that seaport. He proposed remedial plans, which with the coöperation of friends of emigrants in New-York and Liverpool, might be successfully carried out. Chas. A. Joy, Esq., Professor of Chemistry in Union College, was also present, and addressed the meeting.

Political Meetings.

The Administration wing of the Democratic party in this City met last evening at Tammany Hall, to ratify their State nominations. The attendance of Governor SEYMOUR had been announced by advertisement, and aided in collecting a very good audience,—so that the front room of Tammany, which was the only one thrown open, was filled. The Governor, however, was not present, so that the active labors of the occasion devolved on others. The inevitable Mr. COCHRANE made the principal speech, in which he was more than usually vehement and vituperative. Throughout his remarks he made not the remotest allusion to the Federal Administration, nor to the only two acts by which it has achieved distinction—the Nebraska bill and the bombardment of Greytown. Not a single syllable did he utter in vindication of that great Democratic measure—the repeal of the Missouri Compromise—nor would a chance hearer have learned from his speech that any such issue was awaiting the decision of the people of the State of New-York at the coming election. Equally abstemious on this point was ALEX. MINE, Esq., the only orator by whom Mr. COCHRANE was followed. Both these gentlemen devoted their time and their talents to the denunciation of the Anti-Liquor law of last session, and of the Whig candidate for Governor, who voted for it in the State Senate. Upon this topic neither of them uttered anything new, nor did they place in any new light the considerations which have already been frequently urged on public attention. Both took it for granted—though without the slightest warrant, so far as we know,—that this identical law, in all its details, is to be reenacted if the Whigs succeed at the coming session; and all their arguments were based on this assumption. Mr. MINE devoted a portion of his speech to a very earnest, and we presume a very effective plea for a fusion of the two branches of the Democratic party.

Mr. COCHRANE, as is well known, is an office-holder under the Federal Administration, and is also the active leader of the Administration party in this City and State. His neglect to allude to the Nebraska issue under the circumstances is not without significance. It amounts to a confession of judgment on this point. The Administration evidently concedes that it cannot be sustained in this State. The chief importance of the coming election grows out of the fact, that it will pronounce the verdict of New-York upon the great cardinal measure of the Democratic President. The decision of this State on this point will decide the fate of the Administration. An adverse verdict will prostrate President PIERCE and his Cabinet. Such a decision they can never reverse. As goes New-York upon that point, so will go every Northern and Western State. A conviction of this fact, one would think, would naturally induce the Administration to leave no stone unturned to secure a verdict in its own behalf; and yet, at the very outset of the canvass, Democratic office-holders dare not even allude in public to the question at issue!

The meeting of last night exposes the tactics of the Softs in the coming election. They intend, at least in the large Cities, to abandon political issues entirely, and to throw themselves wholly on that "scathing support" which Gov. SEYMOUR so earnestly deprecated, in his first conversation with Mr. DELAVAN after his Veto Message. They relinquish all hope of rallying the Democratic party as such to Gov. SEYMOUR's support, and are summoning instead those of all parties who are directly interested in the sale of ardent spirits. If the Whigs have sought the alliance and aid of the friends of Temperance, the Softs have taken their stand distinctly and exclusively on the platform of Intemperance. The issue of such a contest is of much more importance to the people at large, than to any political party.

Another Letter from Judge Bronson.

Judge BRONSON promises to equal the Evening Post's favorite model of a complete letter-writer. He has written still another letter defining his position in the coming canvass. The document may be found on another page of this morning's TIMES, and will repay perusal. It is addressed to E. C. DELAVAN, Esq., and is mainly a remonstrance with that gentleman against having allowed the Temperance State Convention to adopt candidates who had been nominated by either of the political parties of the State. He thinks the Convention did wrong in thus allowing the Temperance question to become in any way identified with party politics. This difference of opinion, between the Judge and the Convention, can be easily explained. They look at the matter from different points of view. The Judge thinks a Temperance party ought to have been organized and kept in the field,—free from any alliance or contamination with other parties, and maintaining a position of dignified and unspotted imbecility for an indefinite series of years. The course he recommends would doubtless have secured that result.

The Convention, on the other hand, aimed at practical measures. They desired the enactment of a prohibitory law;—and they took what they believed, and what will probably prove to be, the shortest and the surest road to that end. The Judge asks how long such a law thus passed will stand? That will depend entirely on the character of the law and the sentiment of the people concerning its practical operation. If the law is judiciously framed, so as to be at once sufficient and yet not obnoxious to just censure,—if it attains in any considerable degree the beneficent end at which it aims, without working those dreadful disasters to business, property and personal rights which its interested enemies so freely predict,—if it is so shaped as to meet the hopes of its friends rather than to justify the expectations of its foes, we may reasonably hope that it will work its own way to public favor, and become as permanent and popular as any of the laws for the promotion of the public good, which now hold a place on our statute book. If it fails thus to command public approval, it of course will be repealed. To a certain extent, such a law is unboubtedly an experiment;—but, in the present state of the public mind, and under the existing pressure of the evils of intemperance, it is one which ought to be fully and fairly tried. The Temperance Convention took the course which promised to secure a speedy and effective trial of it;—Judge BRONSON thinks they ought to have gone on making it a matter of speculation merely.

Judge BRONSON next proceeds to denounce the Whig ticket as pledged to Abolitionism; he finds no better support for such an aspersion than the unauthorized statements of a member of the Free Democratic Convention, which did not adopt the Whig ticket, but rejected it on the express ground that it did not come up to their mark. The Judge argues earnestly on this point, but very unfairly and unsuccessfully.

In his opinions on the Temperance question Judge BRONSON is making evident progress. He stands now on Gov. SEYMOUR's platform precisely. In his first letter he approved the Veto. In his second he declined to express any opinion. In his third he said he had not read the bill, but thought that if it was merely prohibitory, the Governor should have signed it. In his fourth he doubted the expediency of prohibition. And in his fifth, which is thus far his last, he declares distinctly that "no prohibitory liquor law ought to be passed." This is decisive and emphatic; and it shows that on one point, at all events, both sections of the Democratic party hold precisely the same position. Whether, therefore, the Hards or the Softs succeed in the election, no prohibitory liquor law can be enacted.

The Recent English Court-Martial.

The American public, thanks to the necessity of satisfying their curiosity upon European topics of interest, are not ignorant of the proceedings which lately took place at Windsor, in a Court-Martial (so facetiously as truly called by the Examiner, a Court-partial,) upon a certain ill-used Lieutenant, named PERRY. This young man was sober, well-conducted, and studious; his immediate comrades, drunken, vicious, and impudent. They annoyed and insulted him, in a variety of ways. One of them, a Lieutenant named GREEN, nearly exhausted the vocabulary of Billingsgate against him. A blow was the result, and for this, Lieutenant PERRY was tried before a Court-Martial—probably the worst tribunal in the world. GREEN was examined, but the Court would not allow the accused to be cross-examined. The end was, the conviction of PERRY, including his dismissal from the Army. But, so illegal were the proceedings, that, at the Horse Guards, the sentence of the Court was annulled.

Then followed the trial of Lieut. GREEN, for having assaulted Lieut. PERRY, and for having used against him language, disgusting, insulting, and provoking. The assault was proved, but the Court acquitted him! The bad language was proved, and for its use he was condemned. But the Deputy Judge-Advocate revised the proceedings in this case also, and reviewed the decision, holding that the verdict of acquital (for the assault) was against the evidence. The Court was ordered to revise its sentence. They refused to change it; whereupon the Commander-in-Chief ordered GREEN to leave the army, with permission to sell his commission for what it had cost him.

But, while GREEN's trial was going on, PERRY brought himself within the "long range" of military law. He wrote a letter to the President of GREEN's Court-martial, in which he complained that when he had gone to Colonel GARRETT, to complain of the ruffianly conduct of the unlicked cubs, his brother officers, that commanding officer called him "a fool" for his pains; that when the Colonel did reprimand the delinquents, the reproof was so weak that it was far from checking them; that he (PERRY) was compelled to threaten an appeal to the General of the District; and that one Capt NICHOLS, instead of protecting young subalterns, ill-treated them. On the mere technicalities he was again brought to trial, and met the case manfully. In his defence, he called his brother officers, (including the superior ones to whom he had vainly complained,) but their evidence availed him not. They were plagued with convenient want of memory, on every point which could exculpate the prisoner. Not THEODORE MASOCCHI himself, when at the trial of Queen CAROLINE, in 1820, he perpetually answered "Non mi ricordo," had a more sieve-like memory. The result was that PERRY was convicted and sentenced to be cashiered,—but as he was all but technically and Court-Martially innocent, was allowed to sell his commission.

Public sympathy which usually manifests itself in England by means of a public subscription, has already raised $9,500 to defray the expense of Lieutenant PERRY's defence. It is in contemplation, also, to collect sufficient for the purpose of sending Colonel GARRETT to a Court-Martial for neglect of duty, to indict the "non mi ricordo" officers for perjury, and to prosecute them, also, for a conspiracy against Lieutenant PERRY, whose sole offence was that he is a poor man's son, and was a modest, sober, moral, and studious officer. Public indignation has set in very strongly against the 46th Regiment—or rather against the majority of its officers, and, though it may not punish must shame them. It is likely, also, by the exposure of its weakness as a pseudo-judicial institution, to compel the military authorities to revolutionize, if not wholly destroy, the barbaric system of Court-Martials, where the proceedings are often so very much at variance with common sense and common law, that it is next to impossible for a subaltern to obtain justice, if his superior officers are opposed to him. The ordinary law of evidence does not prevail before such a tribunal, for questions must be put in writing, so as, by affording time for deliberation, to destroy the effect and value of viva voce testimony. The prisoner is only permissively allowed to avail himself of the quickness and experience of a lawyer, and must himself read his defence; whereas, in all other Courts of Justice, he may be heard by counsel. In one word, the whole system requires, and now will probably receive reform. There is no reason why a soldier should not have as much justice as a civilian.

The 46th Regiment, quartered in the Royal borough of Windsor, has achieved so much unpopularity there, that the officers' stereotyped reply, "I have no recollection of this," is shouted in their ears wherever they appear. A lad who had used the words as the Major and Adjutant were passing, was incontinently ordered by the former to be taken in custody by a soldier, and taken to the police-station, whence he was bailed out. When the case was heard before the Mayor, it was denied that the lad had used the words against the thin-skinned officers, and that, even if so used, no offence against the law had been committed. "No!" said the Major. "but it is an offence against the feelings," and I apprehended the boy in order that he might be lectured by the magistrate. Of course, the lad was liberated, and—lectured.

This is a curious case. For an unknown offence, unnamed in, and unpunishable by any statute, simply "an offence against the feelings," a lad was imprisoned on the Sabbath-day: would have remained in a cell all night, if he had not been bailed out; was solemnly accused in a Court of Justice; and, on being liberated, was lectured by the Mayor, who thus carried out the thin-skinned Major's desire as to giving him advice and admonitions!

The Major will be sued in a Court of Law (not before a Court-partial,) for damages, for an illegal imprisonment. The case simply shows the disorganized condition of one portion of the British army, and the tyranny created by habits of unbridled authority and command, which leads military men to rough-ride over unoffending civilians.

State Fairs, Cattle Shows and Baby Fair.

The great Baby Convention came off yesterday, at Springfield, Ohio, and the awards were made. Characteristic letters were read from FANNY FERN, HORACE GREELEY and the like. Our lady friends, if they take any interest in the matter, will find something about it in our telegraphic column.

A State Fair is appointed for Connecticut, at New-Haven, from Oct. 10 to the 13th. It is the first ever held in the Pumpkin Pie State,—a fact that will surprise some, we suspect. They are anxious, on this occasion, to redeem their character from all suspicion of being behind the times, by a greater turn-out and a finer display than anything that has been talked about lately.

The New-England Horse Exhibition comes off from the 17th to the 19th of October, at Brattleboro, Vt., under the auspices of the New-England Agricultural Society. Railroads are expected to be as liberal as is customary on such occasions, and abundant premiums are offered to stimulate competition.

Our own State Fair, the thirteenth return of it, is in the full tide of successful experiment, on Hamilton-square. There was much objection to bringing it here, on the part of many of the Society's best members; but it was deemed best to try it once. Yesterday was the first day that was at all propitious, since it opened, and to judge from the crowds on the ground, the increasing crowds that stuffed the Avenue cars, and even bore down their roofs, the attendance must have been immense. But we speak freely of its merits elsewhere. To-day's the last of it. Every citizen will want to see it before it breaks up, and we look for an immense gathering to hear Hon. JOHN P. HALE's speech at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The Harlem Company is preparing to double its cars, to-morrow, and getting up and back again, will probably be much easier than it has been. An opportunity to see a better collection of cattle, will not be afforded for many a day—unless better times are coming than have been. At least good judges say that, on other occasions, a larger collection may have been exhibited, a better one never has.

Illinois Politics.

JOHN WENTWORTH, long time triumphant leader of the Democracy of the Chicago district, formally withdraws his name from the list of candidates for a seat in Congress. He thinks he could get the nomination if he wanted it, and probably be elected. Some of his opponents not doubting the first point, greatly doubt the second. The withdrawal is not perhaps impolitic. JOHN is not as yet indissolubly tied to either faction of the party now existing in his district; but both DOUGLAS men and Anti-Nebraska men are bound that their candidate shall be committed. Moreover, running on a DOUGLAS platform, he seems to admit that he would be defeated,—on a platform of another color, where he more legitimately belongs, he will be likely to injure the Judge. So he withdraws like many another patriot who thinks his chances doubtful if he stands.

By the way, up to this time the Judge has stumped the State pleading the virtue of his Bill without other replies than such as the Whigs or some few indignant freemen have chosen to extemporize. But the Democrats are at last persuaded that it will not do to let faithfulness to the Nebraska bill be made a synonym for orthodox Democracy. The Alton Courier says that Judge TRUMBULL, Judge BREESE, Col. McCLELLAND and others, old fashioned anti-agitation Democrats, will meet DOUGLAS at Springfield and give him a chance to prove the theses he has been nailing at the doors of all the political universities ever since Congress adjourned.

Michigan Whig State Convention.

The Whig State Convention of Michigan was held at Jackson on Wednesday. It is reported to have adopted the Independent State ticket, and passed resolutions opposing the further extension of Slavery. Its proceedings were harmonious.

A Remarkable Man.

"President PIERCE is a remarkable man, and however much fastidious and slanderous may run at approach, he is believed by the people, and will return to private life with scarcely less honor than Jefferson or Jackson, each of whom were slandered and defamed much more than himself."

We do not know how much the Washington correspondent of the Kansas paper in which we find the above bit of prophecy may know about it, but if there is any foundation for it, there is hope for the lawless even. President PIERCE is a remarkable man. His election was a most marvelous piece of history, and his Administration has thus far upset the calculations of all astrologers, and set at defiance even the doctrine of chances. His position to-day is remarkable, and the relations to him of the several factions which in a fused state elected him is no less so. One party disown the man, but claim his principal act, the Nebraska policy. The other endorse the man, but denounce the act by which his friends think he is to be borne down to fame, and honored scarcely less than were the giants of our early democracy—JEFFERSON and JACKSON. It would be sport to see the Muse of History sitting down to the task of writing the chapter on FRANKLIN PIERCE's election. It would almost reconcile one to an unusually long life, to see how and by what by-ways she will do the job in her style as successfully as NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE did it in his.

Lamentable Ignorance.

We verily believe it would be a good speculation to pull out an Abolitionist's teeth and clip his nails, so that he could do no harm, and take him South on exhibition. There is a lamentable ignorance as to the appearance of the animal in some circles even in our National Capital. The Washington Star manifests great surprise that he should have such a shapely head and human features that his portrait can be taken. This is what he says of PARKE GODWIN's portrait in Putnam's (October) Monthly:

"We take it for granted that this engraving represents a mythical or imaginary person; for the face depicted at the head of the monthly does not seem to represent so much an actual man, as to be a sort of conjunction and embodiment of the insane love of one self, and equally insane hatred of everybody else, which manifest themselves in the howl of vituperation which issues periodically from the traitorous abolition conventicles in New-York."

☞ The Lake Superior Journal is earnestly urging the erection into a State—the State of Superior—of the Upper Peninsular of Michigan. Lower Michigan of course objects, professes to think it a poor jest,—knows the South would never permit a new State to be made from a latitude, and wishes its colonial dependent would be sensible. Upper Michigan remembers its great mineral wealth, its abundance of copper and iron, its prosperity, its unsupplied wants, its prospects every year improving, and cannot but hope that the time will come yet when its affairs may be managed otherwise than at such arm's length. It is at least proper for Northern men to look up their resources in case they should be too hardly crowded with States applying from the other quarter.

Theatrical.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—The first new production at this house was made last night—a blank verse adaptation from VICTOR HUGO's prose drama of "Lucrezia Borgia." We may here stop to inquire why a drama so powerful and absorbing should have remained thus long a stranger to the English stage. The original of VICTOR HUGO is, perhaps, objectionable for the extreme licentiousness of its conception. Hideous as is the historical character of Lucrezia, the French dramatist has imparted to his portraiture a few pictorial horrors which, while they are admirable as instances of atrocious invention, scarcely enhance the work in the eyes of an American or English audience. Yet the incidents of Lucrezia's life are replete with dramatic power, and this power intensifies and strengthens to the end. VICTOR HUGO has used these incidents in a manner that has satisfied the Gallic taste. It has remained, however, for "a gentleman of this City"—as the bills have it—to adapt them to the more delicate and suspectible palate of the Anglo-Saxon.

We need not refer to the plot of "Lucrezia Borgia." We have had it in so many shapes that it is "familiar in our mouths as household words." The present dramatic version is, in construction essentially the same as the operatic one, and is, like the latter, comprised in three very stirring acts. The first terminates with the Venetian denunciation of Lucrezia by the Orsini; the second, the escape of Gennaro after having taken the poison, and the third culminates with the tragic avowal of Lucrezia that she is the mother of Gennaro. There are in consequence three splendid tableaux, and we may safely say that each is heightened in no small degree by the dramatic skill of the "gentleman of this City."

It is not an easy matter to write blank verse respectably, for while it deals with passion more correctly than any other style of composition, it also demands a thorough knowledge of passion. The author has certainly achieved a success in this version of "Lucrezia." His tone is elevated, but never unnecessarily ornate. Throughout there is a constant regard for the denouement, and an apparent determination not to weaken them by unnecessary dialogue. This, in itself, is the best indication of dramatic skill.

Of the performance last evening, we can commend especially the Lucrezia of Miss JULIA DEAN. It was one of those peculiar interpretations of alternate love and fierceness of which this lady seems especially capable. Perhaps the anguish of the last act lacked a degree of maternal solemnity—being, we fancy, too girlish—but in every other respect, Miss DEAN's was an able performance.

Mr. EDDY as Gubetta, was only moderately good. This gentleman's voice lacks contrast; it is monotonous and devoid of modulation. Such a defect is to be regretted, for Mr. EDDY reads well and with few objectionable mannerisms.

We cannot say the same for Mr. POPE. His Gennaro seemed to us to be particularly and massively bad, and from first to last overburdened with the worst kind of mannerisms. The rolling of the letter r in simple passages, or indeed in any passage is absurd. What in the use of asking "my mother-r-r-r-r-r, wherrrrre is she? What hast thou done to her-r-r-r-r-r-r, &c. &c. &c.!"

Mr. THOMPSON played the Duke Alphonso with decided ability, and deserved all the applause he received.

The theatre was well filled. On the fall of the curtain the piece was loudly applauded, and the author demanded. He did not however make his appearance. We learn that this able drama is from the pen of Mr. YOUNG, the Editor of the Albion.

English Opera.

The rehearsals at the Broadway Theatre are of daily occurrence. A strong chorus has been engaged, and in rehearsal for some weeks—new scenery has been prepared, additional instrumentality for the orchestra, &c. On Monday the campaign will commence. We expect an unequivocal triumph. HARRISON is a tenor who always pleases, whilst Miss PYNE has no equal on the English stage, or on the Italian, in her style.

We shall refer to this matter again. The establishment of a good English Opera Company in New-York is an event of no ordinary interest.

THE KNOW-NOTHING CONVENTION.

Proceedings of the Second Day's Session.—Political Nominations.

The Grand Council composed of delegates from the various Lodges of the Know-Nothing Order in this State, continued its labors throughout the day yesterday. The business left over from the preceding day, namely the examination of credentials, was first completed.

Several hours were spent in a very heated discussion of the right to a seat of a delegate from Albany, which was contested on the ground that he was not a resident, but of Peekskill, in the County of Westchester. The decision of the Council was adverse to his claim, although the Committee had reported in his favor.

The next business related to the nomination of a State ticket. A resolution was offered that the Order would make no nominations,—on the ground that there was no necessity for them to take action in reference to the State officers, and that it would be almost impossible to do so with that harmony and unity of action which the good of the Order required. The resolution was lost.

A resolution was then offered and adopted that the Grand Council would proceed to nominate candidates for State Officers, and that no person now in nomination by any political party, should be placed upon the ticket.

The Council then proceeded to ballot for a candidate for Governor, with the following result:

Daniel Ullman	257
Joseph W. Savage	114
Thomas R. Whiting	60
Scattering	51
Total	482

Mr. ULLMAN was declared nominated. He was on hand, accepted the proffered honor, and pledged himself, if elected, to carry out the principles of the Order.

A number of votes given for MYRON H. CLARK were refused by the President, who professed, in doing so, to be acting under the rule adopted by the Council. By the time the vote was recorded and announced, there were but a few of the honest and pure members of the Council in attendance—as is evidenced in the fact that but 482 votes polled, when the Council opened its session with 953 members in attendance.

The session of this Council must have been more boisterous than any other that has ever been assembled in this City. The groans, the cheers, the hisses, the calls to order, could be distinctly heard in the halls and lobbies—and many of the speeches could have been reported verbatim. As the vote was being taken, one delegate was heard to declare that "He should now vote as he should vote at the polls, for MYRON H. CLARK." The President declared the vote out of order, and instructed the Sergeant-at-Arms to put out the offending delegate—but must have afterwards retracted, as there was no immediate addition to the members outside.

Shortly after this little episode there was a general break up, and a rush down stairs. They reassemble this morning at 9 o'clock to complete the nominations—though it is doubtful if a quorum will be in attendance. They swore awfully in Flanders—they swore awfully in Odd-Fellows Hall, all the day long yesterday—from which all inference is drawn that the utmost harmony does not prevail in the Council of the Order. This may be a part of the drama, played for the benefit of out-siders—but it seemed very like a jolly good row.

Mr. ULLMAN's friends may congratulate him on having at last achieved a nomination.

In the above report we have, of course, only given the rumors that have reached us concerning the action of the Convention. As its proceedings are secret, and guarded by special and extraordinary precautions, it is impossible to give any authoritative and detailed account of its transactions.

CITY POLITICS.

Hard-Shell Nominations for Congress.

The Hard Shell Congressional Conventions for the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Districts, were held last evening.

The Third District Convention made no nomination, and adjourned to Wednesday evening.

In the Fourth District all the Delegates were present. The Convention was organized by nominating JAMES McGOWAN Chairman, and JOHN LAMY Secretary. The seats of the Delegates in the Fourth Ward were contested, and the ticket headed JAMES HAYS was received. The Convention then proceeded to nominate a Congressman. On the second ballot, MIKE WALSH received fourteen votes; JOHN KELLY, five; and HENRY J. ALLEN, one. MIKE WALSH was then declared unanimously nominated, and the Convention adjourned.

Fifth District.—In this District there was no nomination. The delegates assembled at No. 173 Madison-street and remained in session for some hours, and then adjourned to meet in Williamsburg next Tuesday evening. As the representatives of the press were not allowed to enter the Convention, we are unable to give a report of the proceedings, but understand that the failure to make a nomination was owing to some objections raised by the New-York delegation as to the number of delegates representing Williamsburg. During the evening a Committee was sent from the Convention to wait upon Hon. WM. M. TWEED. The Williamsburg delegation are in favor of Mr. MESERROLE, of Williamsburg, and there is but little doubt of his nomination.

Sixth District.—The Delegates from the Fifth, Eleventh and Seventeenth Wards assembled in Hermitage Hall, and nominated, by acclamation, Hon. JOHN WHEELER for reelection to Congress.

Later in the evening another party of men calling themselves National Democrats assembled in the same place and nominated ANTHONY J. DUGRO (one of the ten Governors) for Congress.

Seventh District.—The Convention met at the corner of Barrow and Greenwich-streets, and renominated WM. A. WALKER. Mr. WALKER is the "Fusion" candidate. He received 11 out of the 15 votes.

Eighth District.—This Convention organized by calling ISAAC TOWNSEND, of the Eighteenth Ward, to the Chair, and appointing HERMAN BURR, of the Twenty-second, and THOMAS McSPEDON, of the Nineteenth, Secretaries. Mr. GUNTHER then nominated FRANCIS B. CUTTING for reelection—which nomination was carried unanimously.

Messrs. GUNTHER and DOUGHERTY were appointed a Committee to apprise Mr. CUTTING of his nomination. This Committee was instructed to report forthwith.

The Convention then took a recess.

The Committee on their return reported that Mr. CUTTING positively declined to serve, but would give the nominee of the Convention his hearty support. The report was accepted, and the Convention then proceeded to ballot for a candidate with the following result:

J. L. Curtis	7	Daniel B. Taylor	4
John Anderson	7	Horace F. Clark	1

An adjournment was then carried to Wednesday, 11 Ayes to 6 Noes.

RECAPITULATION.

From the Washington Sentinel.

Of all the numerous Conventions that have been held in the State of New-York but one has adopted a platform that challenges the respect and appreciation of the lovers of the Constitution. That was the Convention of the National Democrats. All the rest adopted Anti-Slavery platforms, except the Soft Convention, the platform of which is distasteful both to the Democrats and Abolitionists, for it is neither the one thing nor the other. Of all the Conventions that have been held in the various non-slaveholding States in the last few months, and their name is legion, not one of any party, save the Democratic party, has expressed itself in favor of the principles of the Nebraska bill and the maintenance of the Fugitive Slave law.

The New-Jersey State mineralogist has discovered, near Morris, a silver mine. It was found in thin fahrs between the layers of sandstone, having an extraordinary resemblance in many respects to white paper, he has given it the name of "Papyrolite." It is flexible and elastic, not acted on by acids, may be heated red hot without change of form, but loses 20 per cent. of water in heating, and then becomes brittle.

☞ Health, Life and Vigor Secured.—Dr. MORSE'S INVIGORATING CORDIAL, unrivalled with wonderful rapidity, every disorder incident to the digestive apparatus; restored the appetite, renews the strength, hardens the muscles, braces the nerves, gives elasticity to the spirits, so rouse the mental energies, that whatever impurity in the constitution frame a more robust appearance on, allays irritation, calms the disturbed imagination, heals up the shattered constitution, and may be taken without fear by the feebleest maiden, wife or mother, as it is composed solely of the juices of rare Oriental herbs, potent only to invigorate, exhilarate and restore.

If the system has become relaxed by improper indulgences, the Cordial will infuse a more vigorous vitality into every organ. The lost tone resulting from late hours, office or close application to labor of any kind, is quickly restored by its action, and ladies engaged in sedentary occupations, and subjected to inconvenience therefrom, will find it a safe and healthy stimulant. Where the circulation of the blood is languid, or any of the functions of the body are suspended, or impeded, it will restore the natural action and communicate renewed energy to the secretive and distributive organs.

CAUTION.

DR. MORSE'S INVIGORATING CORDIAL has been counterfeited by some unprincipled persons.

In future all the genuine Cordial will have the proprietor's facsimile pasted over the cork of each bottle, and the following words blown in the glass:

DR. MORSE'S INVIGORATING CORDIAL.

MAGNETIC POWDERS.

Unless to be swindled, good folks, you're inclined,
Just examine each dose that purports to be LYON'S,
For unless on the label his name has been signed,
You can't be the genuine place any balance.

PEDDLERS ARE SELLING counterfeit MAGNETIC Powder and Pills for LYON'S preparations for the destruction of insects and vermin. Central Depot for the GENUINE MAGNETIC POWDER and PILLS, No. 424 Broadway. Price 25 cents per flask or box.

NO INVENTION OF THE PRESENT CENTURY has caused such a sensation as the far-famed ITALIAN VEGETABLE SOAP of Dr. GOURAUD. Its properties for removing Tan, Freckles, Sunburn, Discolorations, Ringworm, Salt-Rheum, Barbers' Itch, Chaps, Chapped and every species of Cutaneous Eruptions, border on the miraculous. Not the least among the recommendations of this inestimable Soap is its fastidiality; it can be used in hard, or even salt water, thus rendering it available at sea, where, of course, the luxury of Ismpid Croton is out of the question. Hundreds of our naval officers and ship-masters bear witness to its valuable qualities.

Dr. GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUTILE eradicates superfluous hair from any part of the body. Nothing looks so well on a lady, or a gentleman, as a smooth, clear forehead, and in many instances this cannot be obtained except by the use of Gouraud's Powder Subtile.

Dr. G.'s instantaneous LIQUID HAIR DYE is another article of primary importance, inasmuch as it will instantaneously change red, gray, or white hair to a beautiful brown or black. The genuine of Dr. GOURAUD'S LIQUID VEGETABLE ROUGE is perfectly harmless. One touch of the Rouge gives to the palest face the healthful hue of the moss rose. It is absolutely impossible by washing or rubbing. LILY WHITE, when applied to the skin, heightens to an astonishing degree the brilliancy of the complexion.

Dr. GOURAUD'S ROYAL PALMETTO for lost hair, but prevents falling out, and renders old, silky hair soft, silky and glossy. Office Analytic, &c.

Found at GOURAUD'S old established Perfumery Depôt, No. 67 Walker-st., first door from Broadway.

GREEN TURTLE SOUP AND STEAKS will be served up at E. C. MONTGOMERY'S, No. 11 Bleecker-st., two doors east of Broadway, THIS DAY at 11 o'clock. Oysters in every style.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

LAMARTINE'S NEW WORK.
HARPER & BROTHERS, No. 82 Beekman-st., PUBLISH THIS MORNING,
LAMARTINE'S CELEBRATED CHARACTERS.
Memoirs of Celebrated Characters. By ALPHONSE DE LAMARTINE, Author of "The History of the Girondists." 1 vol., 12mo., muslin, $1 75.

This will be a popular book. It continues the course of many volumes condensed and reprinted in the fascinating style of which LAMARTINE is such a great master. The subjects are:

NELSON,	JACQUARD,
HELOISE,	JOAN OF ARC,
COLUMBUS,	CROMWELL,
PALISSY THE POTTER,	HOMER,
BOOGHAM,	GUTENBERG,
CICERO,	FENELON,
SOCRATES.

As air of beauty is thrown around them all. Whatever is romantic in their histories is set forth with consummate artistic skill, and a fresh and beautiful light is made to play on old facts. The Life of Nelson is, perhaps, the loudest one for a Frenchman, and above all for Lamartine, to write justly—and yet it is most admirably done. He portrays the mingled strength and weakness of his character with a master hand, and condensed and narrates the leading events of his life in a story of thrilling interest.

From the London Literary Gazette.

This work will materially raise the reputation of Lamartine. Along with the brilliancy of style and warmth of imagination, which characterize all his writings, we find here gravity of thought and earnestness of purpose, befitting his mature years and ripe experience. The subject, also, is well suited to his peculiar genius and talents. * * * As a sketcher of historical eccentricities and of historical character, choosing his own subjects, suggested by his own tastes or sympathies, no living author is capable of greater and more successful efforts. In these volumes we have a gallery of illustrious portraits, drawn in bold and striking style, and almost all of them glowing with life-like feeling and expression.

A NEW HISTORICAL SPANISH ROMANCE.
DONA BLANCA OF NAVARRE,
BY DON FRANCISCO NAVARRO VILLOSLADA.
Published this day, DONA BLANCA OF NAVARRE—a work of real substantial merit, giving a truthful exposition of the manners and customs of the Spanish People in the Fifteenth Century.

At the present time, this book possesses an unusual degree of interest to the American reader, as Spain is now what it was at that period—one vast field of civil wars and rival factions. "Dona Blanca" possesses a high order of excellence, written in smooth Castilian, and its success has been in Spain brilliant and immense. In its pages there are blended together the startling events of History, with the fascinations of Fiction, forming a perfect picture of Spanish Life—a picture stretching out into one grand moving Panorama of Kings and Queens, Knights and Peasants, Priests and Nuns, Beautiful and Monks, Castle and Cottage, Hermitage and Field of Battle, Mountain Pass and Sunny Fields, relieved by sparkling wit, spicy dialogue, and genuine humor.

NEW-YORK CITY.

The Stabbing Case in the Ninth Ward—Death of the Injured Man.

The stabbing affair which occurred on Wednesday evening, on the corner of Washington and Horatio-streets, has resulted fatally, the person wounded, PETER GARRISON PORT, having died at the house of his brother-in-law, No. 29 Bethune-street, yesterday morning, at a quarter to 9 o'clock. It seems that the difficulty commenced in the grocery store on the corner, where the deceased threw KING down in play; it is said, but KING on getting up grasped a large cheese-knife which was lying on the counter and chased deceased to the sidewalk, where he inflicted a severe wound in the abdomen. The deceased immediately exclaimed he was stabbed, when KING ran at him again and inflicted a terrible wound in the back, the knife penetrating about four inches. He was immediately conveyed to a drug-store, where his wounds were dressed, and afterwards to the house of his brother-in-law, where he died. He was a young man, twenty-five years of age, was a stone-cutter, and was engaged in the yard of Messrs. BRIZLEY & GRIDGEY, at the corner of Washington and Jane-streets. He was much respected by his fellow-workmen. KING was arrested and lodged in Jefferson-Market Police Station.

Coroner GAMBLE was called to hold an inquest on the body.

The following witnesses were sworn:

Wm. H. Metz—I resided at No. 13 Ames-street, being sworn, said: On Wednesday evening about 7½ o'clock, the deceased and myself were standing on the corner of Washington and Horatio-streets conversing, when Jerome B. King came up to where we were standing, and informed us that he had been insulted by a man named Charles McPherson, who lived in the same house; the deceased asked him how he had been insulted; King replied that McPherson had taken his seat at the tea table; deceased replied that he did not consider that an insult; King said that he did, and that if he ever done so again he would lick him; deceased replied that he could not lick him, and offered to bet $10 that he could not; King then took off his coat and said that was worth $10, and that he would put that up, and also called deceased a d—d liar; deceased then struck King in the face with his open hand, when King exclaimed, "Damn your big soul, you can't strike a man of your size;" deceased then ran after King into the grocery store on the corner where we were standing; when I arrived at the door I saw them clenched, and deceased threw King down on the floor, and then left him and walked out on to the sidewalk; King then got up and followed him out to the sidewalk with a large knife in his hand, and stabbed deceased in the back; the knife now shown looks like the one I saw in King's hand when he came out of the store; after King stabbed deceased, he threw the knife on the walk; deceased then ran up Washington, about half a block, where he met two acquaintances, and exclaimed to one of them, "I'm stabbed;" the two then took hold of him to prevent his falling, and conveyed him to the drug store on the corner of Hudson and Jane streets; did not see deceased strike King, except once, and that was on the sidewalk, with his open hand, before they entered the store.

Richard Clemens, residing at No. 802 Washington-street, corner of Horatio, being sworn, said: On Wednesday evening about 8 o'clock, I was standing in the back part of my store talking to Patrick Nolan, when I saw King enter the store followed by deceased; they then took hold of each other, and deceased threw King on the floor; deceased then got up and walked out of the store followed by King, who struck deceased a blow on the back with something and then dropped it on the sidewalk; I immediately went and picked it up and found it to be a large knife which belonged to me, and which is used for cutting meat; did not see King have a knife in his hand when he struck deceased; did not see deceased strike King at any time; after I picked up the knife I took it in and washed the blood off it, and put it away; the knife now shown is the same; after King had stabbed deceased he remained on the sidewalk talking to some boys, when he said that Post had chipped his face, and was too big for him, and he therefore took the knife; I keep the knife under a bench near where they clenched.

David Uhl, M. D., residing at No. 5 Bond-street, being sworn says: I made a post-mortem examination of the body of Peter G. Post; I found an incised wound just 10 inches below the juncture of the left clavicle with the sternum, dividing the cartilage at the juncture of the eighth and ninth ribs, and two inches in length; there was also an incised wound in the back, one inch in length, nine inches below the spinal protuberance, and inch to the left of the spinal column; the little finger of the right hand was cut to the bone at the first joint; there were no other external marks of violence on the body; the cavity of the left pleura was filled with fluid blood, and there were three wounds in the stomach and one in the diaphragm; the injuries were the cause of death; the knife presented to me could have produced the wounds.

T. S. Edwards, M. D., residing at No. 49 Jane-street, being sworn, said: Between 7 and 8 o'clock on Wednesday evening, I was called to attend a wounded man at the drug-store corner of Hudson and Jane-streets; when I arrived I found deceased lying on the floor of the room behind the store, bleeding from a wound in the abdomen below the left breast, and also one in the back, also on the left side; I attended him during the night, and was present when he died at 9 o'clock this morning; I was also present and assisted at the post mortem examination made by Dr. Uhl, and fully agree with him as to the post mortem appearances and cause of death.

VERDICT.

That deceased came to his death by stabs inflicted with a large knife in the hands of Jerome B. King, at the corner of Washington and Horatio-streets, Oct. 4, 1854.

The prisoner, JEROME B. KING, is a young man twenty-one years of age, born in Pennsylvania, and a cook-painter, and states that he never had any difficulty with deceased and never intended to injure him till deceased struck him.

COMMON COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

Board of Aldermen.

A session of the Board of Aldermen was held yesterday afternoon, NATHAN C. ELY, President, presiding.

PRESIDENT OF CROTON AQUEDUCT.

Alderman KELLY moved to take from the table the document in reference to the confirmation of Eli S. Sutch as President of the Croton Aqueduct. The Ayes and Noes were ordered, and the motion was lost.

ELECTION INSPECTORS.

A number of communications in reference to the resignation and appointment of Inspectors of Elections were received and appropriately acted upon.

The document from the Board of Councilmen in reference to a public testimonial to Capt. Fitch and associates of the steamship Washington, for their exertions in saving the ship Winchester and those on board, having come up for concurrence,

Alderman VOORHIS moved to amend by striking out that portion of the report in which an appropriation of $1,000 was made. He thought it foolish to expend the public funds in that manner. There was no necessity for placing that amount in the hands of a Committee, to be spent at the Astor House or at the Almshouse. The men on the Washington had done no more than their duty when they rescued the persons on the Winchester. They deserved thanks for the act, to be sure, and ought to receive it; but it would be nothing more nor less than an insult to offer them pay in money in $1,000. He would, therefore, vote for the resolution of thanks, but was decidedly opposed to the appropriation.

Alderman HERRICK thought it would be foolish not to make the appropriation recommended. The appropriation was necessary to carry out the intentions of the resolutions, and of those who prepared the report. He strongly condemned what he believed to be the ill-judged economy of the "Reform" members, and said that the money asked for was not intended to be given as pay. As he understood it, it was intended to be used in obtaining suitable testimonials for presentation to the men named in the report.

Alderman MOTT and CHAUNCEY advocated concurrence in the report.

Alderman LUNT was in favor of the vote of thanks, but could not give his sanction to the appropriation. He took the same view of the question as the Alderman of the Ninth. (VOORHIS.)

Alderman BOARDMAN also opposed the appropriation. The public, he thought, had manifested their approbation of the act of Capt. Fitch, as regarded the presentation of money. It was just and right that the Corporation should take cognizance of the humane and daring exertions of Capt. Fitch and his companions. He (the Alderman) had himself in the course of his life saved some thousands of lives, but he had never asked and never desired pay therefor. If he understood the report from the other Board, it was intended to divide $500 among the sub-officers and crew. He disapproved of the report so far as it related to an appropriation, and was therefore in favor of striking out the second resolution.

Alderman HOWARD said that in all this matter in reference to the Winchester, the poor common sailors were overlooked. He would vote for the appropriation if the money were properly disposed. He did not like to see the officers have all the benefit, while the men who really did the work get little or nothing. He would, therefore, move an amendment authorizing the Committee to present to each of the men of the Washington, Captain and crew, a medal of equal value commemorative of the services which they had rendered.

The matter was debated for some time longer, and finally the whole subject was laid on the table.

MEDICAL.

THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION. By Dr. A. M. MAURIDEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women, &c. Comprising Sixty-Six Engravings. Price $1. On Fine Paper, Extra Binding, $1 50. Every complaint to which a woman is subject, from infancy to menopause, is here treated upon. Medicines fully described, with the cause, the symptoms, and the proper mode of treatment in a plain, simple, but in the most chaste language, easily understood. Also that every woman may discover by comparing her own symptoms with those described, the nature, character, and cause of her complaint; and be spared much anxiety and suffering. The wife about becoming a mother has often need of instruction and advice of the kind which her inexperience, her future health, and the health of her unborn offspring demand; and which her delicacy forbids seeking medical advice! How many suffer from protracted pain (falling of the womb), or from other chronic weaknesses, debility, &c.!! How many are in constant agony for many months previous to confinement! How many have difficult, if not dangerous deliveries, and live and uncertain recoveries! Those whose lives are hazarded during such times will each find in its pages the means of prevention, amelioration and relief. How many bitter moments, how much anguish, might have been spared to the mother, to her husband, to her relatives, by a timely perusal of this little volume. It is impracticable to convey fully the various subjects treated of, as they are of a nature strictly intended for the married, or those contemplating marriage.

For sale by STRINGER & TOWNSEND, No. 222 Broadway; ADRIANCE, SHERMAN & CO., Astor House, No. 1 Vesey-st.; DEWITT & DAVENPORT, (Tribune Buildings,) at No. 8 Astor House, Broadway, and at the Publishing Office, No. 129 Liberty-st., New-York; JOSEPH TUCKER, Middle-st., Phila.; T. P. PETERSON, No. 98 Chestnut-st., Philadelphia. On the receipt of $1, a copy will be transmitted by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States. All letters must be addressed, post-paid, to Dr. A. M. MAURIDEAU, Office, No. 129 Liberty-st., New-York, or Box No. 1,294, New-York Post-Office.

DR. E. & L. PERRY'S CO'S EXCELLENT WORK ON DISEASE—THE SILENT FRIEND.—Its 78th thousand, fifteenth edition, illustrated by one hundred anatomical and explanatory colored engravings, on steel, enlarged to 300 pages, containing the remedy for the prevention of diseases, may be had at the office of the undersigned. Price $1.

This book ought to be studied by every young man, and every man, ought to read it with attention. Those who are afflicted with the diseases mentioned therein, will certainly regain their health, increase the animal spirits, invigorate and cheer the whole animal machine, by taking the medicines described in the book, whenever such a complaint: and be spared much anxiety and suffering. Sold by DR. E. & L. PERRY, Physician and Surgeon, Sole Agent in the United States for the sale of Drs. E. & L. Perry & Co.'s (of London) "The Silent Friend," and their Specific Remedies. Office, No. 174 William-st., N. Y.

MEDICAL ADVISER AND MARRIAGE GUIDE.—Eleventh edition—245 pages, 15 colored engravings, representing all the diseases of the reproductive or sexual system, and presents the latest discoveries in reproduction. The afflicted should use no remedies before learning from this valuable work the superiority of the author's Paris and London treatment of private diseases. Both married and single should consult it. Sold at No. 293 Broadway, and mailed free for $1, by the author, DR. FIRMIN, of No. 214 M-st., between 10th and 11th, sts., where receive at the largest establishment in this City and in Brooklyn is unexceptionably certain in the cure of the most secret and perfect light at stated hours.

At the New-York Daily Times, where the Gas Regulator has been in operation and where the gas-burners were put at the best and most economical kind—where no one has requested much of gas. FIRMIN'S system has reduced the consumption from 1,200 cubic feet, the average quantity consumed in July and August, to 1,000 cubic feet, the average quantity consumption in August and September—giving a better light of that. (See Certificates—Editors' rooms, Compositors' rooms, and Press-rooms.)

All agree that the Gas Regulator system is fully equal to their wants, while it is equally certain that it costs nearly one-half less. Consumers of Gas will rejoice to learn that this is by no means a singular or exceptional case, but that, on the contrary, a saving of 75 to 100 per cent, on the necessary cost of the Gas is frequently effected.

At one of the largest hotels in this City, also at one of the most extensive establishments in Brooklyn—the Naval Hospital—seven great saving and improvements have been effected. Indeed, there is scarcely a Gas consumer who cannot be benefited by this system to a similar extent, the Gas Regulators having been applied, as they had been in all the cases alluded to, burning no exception. At another large establishment a saving of 5 per cent, equal to about $2,000 per year, has been effected, in addition to a former 50 per cent. saved by FIRMIN'S GAS BURNERS, in conjunction with KIDDER'S GAS REGULATOR, applied about one year since, proving a saving equal to about 100 per cent. on the necessary cost of the Gas, with a cleaner and better light in every respect.

By FIRMIN'S system, any quality or quantity of light may be obtained and preserved invariably at any given burner or apparatus, without possibility intercepting any other light in the same premises.

By this system, where the street pressure or supply has been deficient, it has been increased sufficiently to preserve almost perfect uniformity of supply, where all the experiments of gas dealers, gas regulators, patent burners, &c., have failed.

This system is not expensive, even at first cost, perfect operation of all burners, which need not necessarily be exchanged; it is cheaper than any other; it allows of no waste whatever, and subjects the consumer to no inconvenience, no flickering of the gas; no light going out through the contriving of defective regulators; no flickering, gold-destroying light; perfection is the thing sought—perfection is the thing secured, so far as the Gas is concerned. J. FIRMIN, No. 214 M-st., between 10th and 11th-sts.

J. F. desires that it may be distinctly understood that he has now no connection whatever with any gas regulator, gas meter, gas burner, patent gas burner, or any other gas fixtures, in public use, and upon which some will have failed. Certificates from the New-York Daily Times Compositors' Rooms.

Our gas lights on the Compositors' Floor operate entirely to our satisfaction. The gas is not consuming the workmen of deficiency of light. M. F. GALE.

Aug. 26, 1854.

The gas lights around the grounds, the contents, and about the Press Room generally, were so bad, flickering and consequently so dim, that, if continued, it would indeed the effect would have been utterly destructive to the sight of the workmen, if the same had entirely light—had been continued.

Firmin's system has removed the difficulty.—the lights are steady and pleasant, they are equal to our wants, better and stronger than they were before the change.

NEW-YORK CITY.

New-York State Agricultural Fair.

THIRD DAY.

The weather yesterday morning proving highly propitious, the attendance on the grounds allotted to the use of the Agricultural Society was much larger than on either of the two previous days. From the opening of the Exhibition, crowds continued to pour in by every means of conveyance, and fresh spirit appeared to be infused among exhibitors and spectators; many of the former coming in at the eleventh hour, and entering their horses and other articles for competition.

Every railroad car and stage which arrived during the forenoon was filled to its utmost capacity, and many persons were deterred, if not actually prevented by the difficulty of obtaining seats or standing room.

The exhibition of Horses commenced about 10 o'clock. The first class paraded in the large or upper ring, were single-harness or saddle horses for all work, of which about twenty were entered, of such varieties of excellence that it would be a difficult and invidious class before the competent judges have made any award to particularize any. Matched trotting horses were then shown, and afforded considerable sport and excitement by their performances. The most conspicuous of those contending for prizes were a pair of switched tailed bright bay mares, entered by Mr. E. G. DEWEY, bay geldings belonging to Mr. WHITLOCK, of Westchester County, and a bay and brown belonging to Mr. LEWIS G. MORRIS. These appeared to be pretty equally matched in speed; but the excitement was principally created by a pair of old stagers, the property of Mr. BROWN of Westchester, entering the list and going ahead of all their more youthful competitors in gallant and steady style; the shouts of the spectators, who were not slow to appreciate the fun, never inducing them for one instant to break in their paces. One of these was a grey horse formerly well known as a trotter and rejoicing in the name of Beppo, now aged 16, and the other a bay horse of equal merit, apparently, and aged 23. The bay being a little sprung forward, was incompetent, according to the rules (requiring perfect soundness) to contend for the prize; but all awarded them the palm of speed. Beppo, matched with a young grey, subsequently figured among the teams of carriage horses; amongst which, the most striking turn-out, was a team of four dark carriage horses. The wheelers were each about sixteen hands 3 inches in height matched to a shade in color and marks, and each exhibiting the same fine points of strength and power in loins, chest and shoulders. The weight of these pair was, we were informed, upwards of thirteen hundred pounds each. The same observations will apply to the leaders, except as to size, the latter being under sixteen hands, and as such entered in a different class. Among the others were a very pretty pair of bright bays of small size, not exceeding fifteen hands two inches, entered by Mr. HORACE BACON, of New-York City. Some of the teams were cross-matches,—as a brown and grey, a black and a brown—and there were some doubts as to their admissibility, but we understood the Judges did not reject them, but would take the question of similitude in colors, &c., into consideration in one point of merit.

A [illegible] of single thoroughbreds, [illegible] gallops in harness followed, but we did not observe any as displaying extraordinary speed.

Blood stallions, mares and foals were exhibited in the lower ring, and here Mr. MORRIS's imported English stallion, Monarch, now aged 20 years, appeared in full beauty, spirit and vigor, most of the spectators admiring him and turning him a colt. Mr. DE MOTT's Trustee, chestnut, also imported from England, and now aged 25, was also to be seen in good condition, and Mr. BURNHAM's chestnut mare, Molly Stark, with some of his numerous progeny, consisting of a chestnut colt, aged 4 years, by Tornado, a beautiful animal; a 2 year old, and a yearling foal.

Of the younger stallions, from other States and Canada, the one which excited our greatest admiration was Young Liverpool, a beautiful four-year old bay, bred by THOMAS DERRICK, of Canada. This appeared to be "a worthy scion of a noble stock," the sire being Leopard got by Liverpool out of Sneaker by Canal, (the sire of Touchstone in 1834, and Launcelot in 1840, both winners of the great St Ledger stakes at Doncaster, England.) Queen, the dam of Young Liverpool, was also thoroughbred, being sired by Monmouth Eclipse, out of dam by Dutock. Mr. DERRICK had also two first rate trotting stallions on exhibition—Young Norman, four years old, and Young Bashaw, three years old—each combining all the points requisite for speed, strength and endurance.

A fine grey stallion was exhibited by Mr. HARRINGTON, of Bennington, Vt., which was sired by Hamiltonian, a celebrated Vermont horse, dam sired by Comet, Comet by Bishop Hamiltonian, Bishop Hamiltonian by imported Messenger—making Mr. HARRINGTON's horse two crosses from Hamiltonian, and only three from "Messenger," and half-brother to Hero, Mountain Maid, and other eastern-bred trotters of celebrity.

A team of three splendid Dray Horses, of dark bay color, and of enormous size, belonging to ADAMS & Co's Express, and brought here from Boston, were much noticed for their gigantic and symmetrical proportions, as well as for their extreme docility, obeying the directions of the driver without any control by whip or rein.

In one of the lower rings an extensive show of mules took place, some of which must have exceeded 15 hands in height, and were strong, powerful animals, driven in teams of eight, six and four. There were but few as we understood that were raised in this state, the principal supply being from New-Jersey. Mr. G. S. BISHOP and son, of Jersey city, had a pair of very smart fancy ones well trained and in fine condition.

CATTLE.

Besides the cattle specified in the report in the DAILY TIMES of yesterday, there were several deserving of notice. Among the horned cattle the competition in Durham and Devon breeds seems to be very brisk. Messrs. HENGERFORD, BRODIE & Co., of Adams, Jefferson County, exhibit some fine specimens of imported Short-horned Durhams, and some calves bred from imported stock. They have also a splendid 3 year old Ayrshire Bull "Kelburn," in the exhibition—who boasts as long a pedigree as any chieftain in his native shire and seems to be destined to transfer the glories of his race to these climes, if we may judge from his progeny already raised by his owners. "Robin Hood" is a fine 5 year old Bull, of the Short-horned breed, raised here by Messrs. HUNGERFORD, BRODIE & Co. "Lady Ayr," "Cherry Blossom," and "Lady Newman," are fine imported heifers of the same breed, rising 2 years old. The other exhibitors in this line are Mr. BECAR, Mr. SPENCER and Mr. KELLY. W. P. & C. S. WAINWRIGHT have some fine specimens of the Devonshire breed.

SHEEP AND SWINE.

In this department are some fine specimens of Leicestershire long-wooled Sheep, imported, and lambs bred from them in this country.

Of the Swine the Yorkshire breed attracted principal attention.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS, &c.

Among the many ingenious implements, besides those already noticed, was a graduating valve gauge, for regulating the blast of air from a smith's bellows, and keeping a continuous and regular draft of any force required upon the furnace. It was exhibited by Messrs. STORMS & Co. of this City.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

In this department we observed the Mexican Phosphatic Guano, which attracted much notice. We are glad to see Agriculturists turning their attention to Phosphates as fertilizes, and appreciating their superiority over Ammonia.

The various Committees we understand had decided the awards and were all prepared to report, and their decisions will be announced this day after the delivering of the Oration.

PLOWING AND SPADING MATCH AT MOTT HAVEN.

The usual Plowing Match took place yesterday, on the farm of Col. L. G. MORRIS, at Mott Haven. The judges, various competitors, and a large number of interested observers were punctually on the ground at the hour specified. The place chosen for the match was admirable for the purpose—an open meadow of eight acres with gravely soil, light and, and a slightly undulating surface.

The following entries were made:

G. H. Sheldon, Cayuga County	Oxen.
Daniel Westfall, Wayne County	Horses.
William Raby, Monroe County	Horses.
Benjamin Fowler, Dutchess County	Horses.
A. M. Clark, Cayuga County	Oxen.
Harvie Purdue, Morrisania	Horses.
John Roe, Monroe County	Horses.
Joseph Swanit, New-Jersey	Horses.
Newell French, Michigan	———

Some who had entered their names did not appear.

The ground was first staked off into sections of one-quarter acre each. These sections were numbered and lots drawn for choice. The rules of the match required a furrow 11 inches wide, 6 inches deep, the furrow in all cases to be lapped, and accorded each competitor two horses. There were five Premiums to be awarded, of $10, $8, $6, $4, $2; each to plow his allotted portion. The teams started together.

Everything passed off satisfactorily, and the specimens of plowing were pronounced, in the aggregate, if anything a gradual improvement on previous years. There were a variety of plows used. The execution of the Michigan-built plow drew the largest share of attention.

Subjoined we give the order in which the prizes were awarded. The time varied from 57 to 90 minutes:

1st prize, $10, to	NEWELL FRENCH.
2d prize, $8, to	G. S. SHELDON.
3d prize, $6, to	O. B. WESTFALL.
4th prize, $4, to	MORRIS & PURDY.
5th prize, $2, to	WM. RAITY.

SPADING MATCH.

A Spading Match came off at the same time with the Plowing Match. It excited no little interest and merriment. The following persons entered:

Daniel Norton, Morrisania, Irish, aged 21 years.
Michael Skivington, Morrisania, Irish, aged 22 years.
John Roe, Morrisania, German, aged 20 years.
John White, Morrisania, English, aged 28 years.
William McCoy, West Farms, Irish, aged 35 years.
Joseph Fitzgerald, Morrisania, German, aged 27 years.

The space to be spaded was 20 feet by 10 feet wide, and to be spaded 10 inches deep, the work to be accomplished within an hour and like Spring work. These were three premiums to be given—a silver cup, $10; do, $8; medal, $4. The competitors worked like good fellows and amid repeated plaudits. The time varied from 42 to 51 minutes. The first prize was awarded to JOHN BAER.

The Historical Society's Anniversary.

The New-York Historical Society, as we have announced on previous occasions, proposes to signalize the arrival of its semi-centennial birthday by suitable public ceremonies. In the year 1804 the Society was established modestly. Within the fifty years which have elapsed since the date of foundation, the body has grown and strengthened. It is now, though not wealthy, highly influential and fairly popular. There is an excellent Library, comprising the choicest treasures of the language, relating in great part to the history of this country, and consisting to a considerable extent of manuscripts which have never yet seen the light, in print. When the Society comes into possession of its new fire-proof premises, it is to be hoped that measures may be taken to spread the richest of these contributions before the public, in the Volumes of Transactions, the issues of which are now much restricted by the limited funds of the Society and by the want of general interest in subjects which must be popularized in order to become sufficiently attractive. There is only one obstacle now in the way of a more general appreciation of the merits of the Society's collections, and the objection is a noticeable feature in the Astor Library as well. The premises are opened to the public at hours when the diligent student cannot avail himself of the advantages they afford, unless he is a man of such leisure as to be able to give the day instead of the evening to the prosecution of his inquiries.

The project of a new edifice for the Society's use is just now lagging; nothing having been done for some time in reference to the subscriptions. The deficit in money, however, will probably be made up in a few months; particularly if, as is hinted, each member of the Committee having the subject in charge, pledges himself to raise a specified sum, say $700 or $800. We notice that Mr MAUNSELL B. FIELD, one of the Secretaries of the Society, has sailed for Europe. Mr. BURKMAN, another of the Secretaries, is also abroad, and purposes remaining for two years. Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT has consented to deliver the oration at the coming anniversary. His subject is not yet announced, but will probably be historical. The list for the Society's Dinner is filling up, at $10 per ticket. It is in charge of Col. WARNER, at the Merchant Clerks' Savings Bank, Broadway, near Spring-street. Letters of invitation to invited guests have been forwarded to some thirty or thirty-five gentlemen in Europe and this country, whose presence is desired. No place has been selected for the dinner or the delivery of the oration.

"Eistedd Fod"—Welsh Celebration.

We understand that Welchmen and descendants of Welchmen resident in the United States, have in contemplation the constitution of a National Literary Congress for the encouragement of literary composition in the Welsh and English languages. The "Eistedd Fod," as such a Congress is termed in Wales, is an institution of great antiquity, and has ever received a wide-spread support from all classes of the Welch people. Many wealthy gentlemen of this City have agreed to give the for hoeming Eistedd Fod their patronage, and thirty Welch clergymen have given their names in its favor.

Sail-Boat Upset.

On Wednesday evening, about 8 o'clock, a sail-boat containing three young men from Jersey City, named COCHEIN, THEILEMANN and PRINCE, was accidentally capsized in a sudden squall, off Governor's Island, while jibeing the main-boom, the main-sheet having become entangled. They were rescued from a watery grave by the humane exertions of a Mr. DOHERTY, from Red Hook, who deserves great praise, it blowing very hard at the time.

☞ An inquest was held yesterday, at No. 39 King street, on the body of D. W. THOMAS, who was found dead in his bedroom. It appeared from the testimony elicited before the Coroner that he was of a very eccentric disposition, so much so that his manners were observed by those in the house. A post mortem examination was made by Drs. GRISWOLD and FINNELL, who gave it as their opinion that he had taken strychnine, which was the cause of death. A verdict was rendered of "suicide by strychnine."

☞ A young man named JOHN RUDDERFORD was arrested on the complaint of his employer, R. DALY of No. 91 West Twenty-ninth-street, who charged him with having collected, at different times, sundry small bills, amounting together to about $80, without accounting for the same. He was taken before Judge STUART and fully committed for examination.

☞ JOHN STARRS, who was run over by the Harlem Railroad cars on Wednesday last, died yesterday morning at the Bellevue Hospital. Coroner HILTON will hold an inquest to-day.

☞ D. VAN RENSSELAER, Esq., has been elected General of the Veterans of 1812, in place of the late NICHOLAS HAIGHT.

☞ Phrenology is the most useful of all modern discoveries; for while others enhance creature comforts mainly, this science teaches life and its laws, and unfolds human nature in all its aspects. Its fundamental doctrine is that each mental faculty is exercised by means of a portion of the brain, called its organ, the size and quality of which are proportionate to its power. Its proof is Universal Nature. All animals, as compared with all others, and all human beings, as contrasted with all others, and with all animals, furnish living demonstration that it is interwoven through all nature. Prof. BILLIMAN hears the following testimony:

"Phrenology undertakes to accomplish for man what philosophy performs for the external world; it claims to disclose the real state of things, and to present nature unveiled and in her true features."

LONG ISLAND.

The Germans.

On Wednesday evening, the German Independent Association of Williamsburg, held its first meeting. It met in Military Hall, in Ewen-street. Among other transactions, the meeting passed the following resolutions:

First, Never to vote for any person belonging either to the party of the Know-Nothings or the Temperance men, or for any man friendly to them.

Second, To render every assistance to such persons as may be desirous of getting out their Naturalization papers.

Third, That a Committee of ten members be elected to carry out the object of the last resolution.

THE TURF.

Trotting on the Centreville and Union Courses, L. I.

Two matches were announced to take place yesterday. One on the Centreville Course, between Ed. Eddy and Highland Maid, for $2,000, mile heats, best 3 in 5, in harness, which was handily won by Eddy in three strait heats. The mare was sadly out of condition, her knees being very much swollen. The betting previous to the start was 100 to 30 on Eddy, and the time made was poor.

The other match took place on the Union Course immediately after the conclusion of the trot on the Centreville. It was between Flora Temple and Mac. Flora, who was the favorite in the betting, won the race, beating Mac with perfect ease.

The following is a summary:

CENTREVILLE COURSE, L. I., Oct. 5.

Match $2,000; mile heats—best 3 in 5, to wagons.

H. WOODRUFF names gr. g. Ed. Eddy	1	1	1

Time.....2:31½, 2:32, 2:32.

BARNUM A BOY.

Another Chapter from P. T. Barnum's Autobiography.

While I was clerk in the store in Bethel, Connecticut, my father kept the village tavern. I usually slept with my younger brother, EDWIN; but when our house was filled with travelers, we were obliged to "sleep three in a bed," by taking in our honest Irish farmer, EDMUND, as sleeping partner. After the store was closed at night, I frequently joined some of our village boys in a party at the house of their parents, and what with story-telling and various kinds of "child's play," a couple of hours would glide away, and at 11 o'clock at night, which was later than my parents permitted, I would slyly creep up stairs, and crawl into bed with the greatest caution, lest I should wake my brother, who would be sure to report my late hours to my parents.

My brother contrived all sorts of plans to catch me on my return home, but sleep would overtake him, and I would elude his vigilance. Sometimes he would pile trunks and chairs against the door, so that I could hardly open it without upsetting the barricade, and awakening him by the noise. I would generally manage, however, to open the door by degrees, and to get to bed without disturbing his slumbers.

One night I found the door fastened on the inside by a nail firmly driven over the latch. Determined that he should not out-wit me, I descended the stairs, found a short ladder which I ascended, and entered our bedroom window without being discovered.

These continual contrivances of my brother made me always suspicious of some trap on my return home, and I generally approached my dormitory with the greatest degree of caution. One night I returned as usual about 11 o'clock, and opening the door a few inches with great care, I run in my arm in order to discover any obstructions which might lie in wait for me. My hand soon touched a small cord which I found was attached to the door-latch by one end; where the other was fastened I could not imagine, and the darkness would not enable me to discover. I drew a knife from my pocket, and cutting the cord very cautiously, I opened the door and got into bed without discovery. On awaking the next morning I found the other end of the cord attached to my brother's big toe! This very ingenious contrivance he thought would wake him up, and it undoubtedly would have done so, but for my timely discovery. Another night he set himself up in the middle of the bed and bolstered himself up with pillows, determined to keep awake until I returned. But sleep at last overcame him, and when I arrived and found him in that position, I snugged myself in easily across the foot of the bed, and went to sleep. In the morning he found himself sitting bolt upright, just as he went to sleep the night before. Giving me a kick to wake me, he exclaimed:

"You worked it pretty well last night, but I'll catch you yet."

"You are welcome to do it if you can," I replied, "but you will have to get up early in the morning to catch a weasel asleep."

The next night he fastened a spur upon his naked heel and went to sleep, thinking that when I got into bed I should hit the spur, and perhaps rake my skin, the pain of which would cause me to cry out and thus awake him. I retired with my usual caution that night, and discovering no contrivance, I concluded my brother had abandoned the chase, and turning my back to him, I was soon wrapped in the arms of Morpheus.

It chanced that night that a number of tin peddlers and other travelers arrived at a late hour, and every bed being engaged, our Irish EDMUND was obliged to sleep with us. Perceiving he stowed away on the back side of the bed, and my brother lying as usual plump in the middle, he quietly laid himself down on the front part of the bed, and went to sleep.

At about 2 o'clock I was awakened by a fearful noise. The full moon was streaming in at the window, making our bedroom as light as day.

"I'll tache ye to go to bed wid a spur on, ye little divil ye," exclaimed EDMUND, as he held my brother high in the air, one hand grasping his neck and the other holding the offending leg with the spur on, just over my head.

"What is the matter, EDMUND?" I exclaimed in surprise.

"Divil a thing is the matter except this brother of yours has run his spur into me groin a matter of three inches," replied the indignant Irishman, who was suffering under the smart of his wound.

"I did not mean it for you; I meant it for TAYLOR," whined out my brother, only half awake.

"Divil a care do I care who you meant it for, so that I got it," replied EDMUND, at the same time giving my brother several slaps which made him yell like a young Indian.

EDMUND then unbuckled the spur, and arranging us all in bed again, he turned to go to sleep, simply remarking to my brother, "The next time ye try to ride me for a horse, ye will find I am a kicking one, ye young varmint!"

SCIENCE AND THE ARTS.

New Inventions—Thermography.

This is the designation bestowed by M. Felix Abate on a method lately discovered by him for transferring figures and tracings, whether natural or artificial, to wood, calico and paper, directly from the objects themselves, provided these possess or are capable of being converted into plane surfaces.

This invention is an offshoot of the mode employed in Birmingham and Sheffield for transferring printed patterns, such as lace to metal, by means of pressure; a process since developed in many applications of great beauty both here and at Vienna, under the name of nature-printing; and which consists in taking impressions in lead, a soft alloy, gutta-percha, or other suitable material, from natural objects, a flower, feather, &c., by pressure; then obtaining metallic electro-plates from these impressions, and finally printing from these electro-engraved plates in the ordinary way.

But, instead of this transfer of the figure from the natural object, say a feather, to the soft metal, thence to an electro-copper plate, and at last to the paper, M. Abate proposes to print directly from the objects themselves; and has exhibited to the Society of Arts some imitations of veneer and of inlaid work taken on sheets of wood, calico and paper, and which he states were procured by the following process. The sheet of veneer or inlaying to be copied is to be exposed for a few minutes to the vapor of hydrochloric acid—the inventor names also sulphuric acid vapors, but this must be a mistake, this acid not emitting fumes at common temperatures; or it is to be damped with either of these acids diluted, and the excess of moisture carefully wiped off. The sheet of veneer is then laid upon one of calico or paper, and an impression struck off by a common printing-press; this impression remains invisible until, as with many of the sympathetic inks, it is exposed to the action of heat, which is to be applied immediately after the sheet is printed off, when a perfect impression of all the marks, figures, and convoluted lines of the veneer is instantaneously produced. This may be repeated for an almost indefinite number of times, wetting the veneer occasionally with the dilute acid, without the impression growing fainter. The designs thus produced all exhibit a general wood-like tint, most natural when oak, walnut, maple, and the light-colored woods have been employed; the darker woods, as mahogany, rosewood, &c., may be printed on cloth or paper, dyed or stained to a light shade of the ground color of the particular wood.

These impressions show an inversion of tints in reference to the original wood—the light parts being dark, and vice versa; but this does not interfere with the general effect. Should, however, a true image be desired, the inventor damps the wood-surface with a solution of ammonia, and then prints on the cloth or paper previously wetted with the dilute acid, and exposes to strong heat as before, when, he states, the effect will be a true representation of the wood.

This process is a very simple one, but as yet evidently limited in its application; although the inventor, with the harmless enthusiasm of his class, sings a loud paean over the benefits hereafter to be derived from this process by the natural sciences. We think, however, with him that this process will be useful in a decoration, since it obviously affords us the means of multiplying, at very little cost, accurate copies of rare and costly woods, marquetrie, mosaic, and inlaid work generally, the which may be used for paper hangings, as wainscoting and panelling; or, if well varnished with hard varnish, serve for many descriptions of "occasional furniture," toys, and boxes of various kinds, for which purpose choice veneers are now employed; and thus furnishing a great variety of cheap and tasteful things at a cost within the reach of people of limited means.

M. Abate also describes another process he calls metallography, or printing on metallic surfaces from engraved wood blocks. In this process the block is damped with a solution of such salts as are decomposed by contact with certain salts. As, for instance, the salts of copper, antimony, &c., applied to the block and printed on zinc and tin; or of hydro-sulphuret of ammonia, on copper, brass and silver; salts which deposit either an adherent metallic pellicle, a film of colored metallic oxide, or stain the metal by the formation of a sulphuret, thus producing the figure cut on the block as in ordinary printing.—London Critic.

Artificial Propagation of Salmon.

On this interesting experiment, the Inspecting Commissioners of Fisheries in Ireland say in their report just issued: "We feel convinced that it may produce many valuable results if properly and judiciously carried out; but, doubtless, in its infancy some failure in substantial advantages may be anticipated, which should not, however, discourage those who adopt it from persevering until they arrive at a practical knowledge of the modes of proper application and management by which it may become available for increasing the value of salmon fisheries. It occurred to us that a great desideratum connected with this question would be ascertaining, if possible, whether, after the young fish had been produced, they might not be kept within the control of the person whose skill and industry would entitle him to the advantages which might be derived; and as the natural habits of the salmon require migration to the sea to become valuable for the use of man, involving the uncertainty of returning to his rightful owner, who reared him in the element alone suited to his infant state, the Inspecting Commissioners, having obtained the sanction and co-operation of the Board with whom they associated, had prepared at Kingstown a place suitable for this experiment. This may be termed a 'sea pond,' two hundred feet long by about fifty feet wide; at low water, its depth is about six feet; a rise of six or seven feet occurs at every tide, flowing in through a grating placed across the entrance, to confine the fish within. We took fry from the fresh waters of the Liffey and Bray Rivers, at the proper age and migratory state, and have transferred them to this pond, where they can now be seen daily. They are watched by many persons anxious for the result of this experiment, and appear to be thriving well, and have increased considerably in size. Very small fish pass in through the grating from the harbor, and the young salmon are seen feeding upon them. If this experiment should succeed in demonstrating that salmon may be thus successfully kept under control until they attain to a size rendering them valuable in an edible point of view, innumerable inclosures may be made around the coast, varying in extent, according to circumstances, and by these means the artificial production of salmon may become of vast importance."

To get Castings of Malleable Iron.

Mr. R. A. BROOMAN, of London, has taken the patent for this invention, which consists of an improved method of preparing wrought-iron, so that it may be capable of being poured or cast into moulds for the production of malleable castings, or articles which shall have all the strength and qualities due to wrought-iron. The invention is designed chiefly for the manufacture of railway wheels; but it is equally applicable to the production of other articles. Scrap or wrought-iron may be employed, or bars or plates cut into small pieces, and it must be melted into crucibles such as are used for melting blister steel. To a charge suitable in amount to the crucible one-half of one per cent. of charcoal by weight, one per cent. of manganese and one of sal ammonia is added. The whole is covered from the atmosphere, and melted in a temperature of about 1,500° Fahrenheit, which temperature is maintained for three hours. The metal is then poured into moulds. Other carbonaceous matter may be substituted for charcoal. The iron thus cast will, it is stated, be malleable, so as to be capable of being treated under the hammer in the forge and formed into other shapes, and thus also part of the iron may be shaped in moulds and part completed by forging, so as to produce intricate shapes and ornamental work.

For Renewing the Teeth of Files.

In our Crystal Palace are shown several patented modes of renewing old files. Here is a method patented by E. Gilbert of London. The teeth are renewed by a corrosive agent applied to the surface of the file. The files are first cleaned from any superabundance of greasy matter, and then placed in a rack inside a bath composed as follows: With one pound of unslacked lime mix two pounds of potash in one gallon of water, stir the whole intimately together, allow it to remain till three fourths the liquid has passed off by evaporation, draw off the remaining quarter of a gallon of liquor, and allow it to cool. In this liquor the files are to remain four hours and are then to be removed and brushed, cleaned in clean water and made quite free from grease, and then immersed in a vertical position in a mixture of one part of sulphuric acid, diluted with two parts of water. The biting action of the acid attacks the whole surface of the files immersed; the continued effect of which is to deepen the several cavities between the cutting points of the teeth, which become as sharp as they were originally. The files must be immersed for from three to six hours or upward, according to the fineness of the files and the strength of the liquid. The files must be withdrawn and brushed from the oxide formed five or six times during the process. The patentee states that the process is at once comparatively inexpensive and removes so little metal that it may be repeated three or four times on the same file, and thus it will render it advantageous to wear files much less than usual before renewing.

Odors from Tar.

Among the products of the destructive distillation of organic matters, a substance of a fine indigo-blue color, and possessing, like indigo, the property of assuming, when rubbed, a coppery metallic lustre, was discovered many years since by Baron Von Reichenbach, and named by him Pittacal. Since then Dr. Anderson has isolated from bone-oil an orange-colored substance; and lately Mr. C. G. Williams has described two other coloring matters, which he has respectively named Versidine and Cermidine, as existing in the oil obtained by distilling the bituminous shale found in Dorsetshire. No application to practical art has yet been made of these discoveries.

MARRIED.

In this City, on Monday, Oct. 2, by Rev. W. C. Smith, WILLIAM H. WILLIAMS, of Belleville, N. J., to JULIA A. FERRELAND, of Newark, N. J.
